Norway Seizes Flint, Returns It to U. S.

Nazi Prize Crew Held For Breach Of Neutrality

Entered Port Without Valid Reason, Norse Admiralty Decides; Vessel Free to Sail

By the Associated Press

Oslo, Norway (Saturday), Nov. 4.—The wanderings of the American freighter City of Flint under a German prize crew ended early today when Norwegian officials interned the Nazi crew at Haugesund, on the western Norwegian coast, and released the ship to her American crew.

The Norwegian admiralty announced the ship, en route from Murmansk, Russia, to Hamburg, Germany, anchored at the Norwegian port without "valid reason" and that it was decided to intern the German crew and that the vessel should be "given free."

This meant, one usually well-informed Norwegian source said, that the City of Flint, a prisoner of the Germans and an object of diplomatic action since she was seized by the German pocket battleship Deutschland on October 9, was free to sail whenever she wished.

May Have Sailed

This source added that the freighter may already have sailed—once more in charge of her American crew.

[Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, United States Minister to Norway, last night reported to the State Department that the German prize crew had been interned because the ship anchored at Haugesund after Norwegian authorities had determined there was no grounds for her stopping in that neutral harbor.

[She was advised by American Consul Maurice P. Dunlap, at Bergen, that the German commander had asked permission to enter the port to deliver to the American consul an American seaman who was ill. The Norwegian admiralty promptly sent a doctor to investigate. The doctor reported the seaman was not sufficiently ill to justify permission for the ship to anchor. Nevertheless, the ship did anchor and the Norwegian authorities interned the crew and released the ship under international law, she reported.—Editor's note.]

The freighter, first taken to Murmansk by the Nazi prize crew after her capture in the Atlantic with what the Germans said was a contraband cargo, reached Haugesund at 5 p. m. (11 a. m. Eastern Standard Time) yesterday.

There were reports that the ship put into the Norwegian harbor to land an American seaman who was ill but as the hours wore on there was no indication that the seaman would be put ashore.

Roused Diplomatic Uproar

The came the admiralty's statement which said:

"The American City of Flint with a German prize crew, was allowed to use Norwegian territorial waters from Tromsoe southward. The ship, accompanied by the Norwegian warship Olav Tryggvason and a torpedo boat, arrived at Haugesund Friday evening and anchored off Haugesund without permission.

"As there was no valid reason for calling at the Norwegian port authorities decided the ship should be given free and the German prize crew interned."

Thus came a startling new turn in the series of incidents which have kept the diplomatic wires burning between Washington, Moscow and Berlin since the 4,963-ton City of Flint fell into the hands of the Germans.

First official news of the capture of the vessel came from Moscow October 23 when the Soviet government announced that she had been sailed into the Arctic port of Murmansk by the German prize crew.

At the time of her capture she was en route from New York to Liverpool and Glasgow with a cargo

The War Today

NORWAY interned the German prize crew of the City of Flint and turned the ship over to its American personnel.

CONGRESS completed action on the neutrality bill repealing the arms embargo and ended the special session called for that purpose.

WAR PURCHASES here by foreign powers are to be controlled and coordinated by an interdepartmental agency to prevent interference with America's own needs and to bring expeditious handling.

UNITED STATES Ambassador Grew told Japan it faced economic pressure from this country if it continued its course in China.

FINLAND disclosed it had conceded two-thirds of Russia's demands, as as Soviet leaders studied the reply delivered in Moscow.

AN AMERICAN citizen has been executed by Germans on a charge of aiding the Poles in the war, the State Department disclosed.

LONDON regarded a report of German trade negotiations with Bulgaria as indicating a desperate attempt to save the Reich's position in the Balkans. Page 5.

IN FRANCE, British First Lord of the Admiralty Winston Churchill conferred with Premier Daladier, Naval Minister Campinchi and Supreme Naval Commander Darlan, over the war at sea. Sudden German activity south of Zweibruecken was accompanied by heavy artillery fire.

OFFICIALS HERE emphasized that the inter-American neutrality declaration of Panama contained no implications of force, merely calling for consultation in case of belligerent actions. Page 2.

Grew Warns Japan on U. S. Rights in China

Envoy Tells Tokyo America May Exert Economic Pressure

By the United Press

Tokyo (Saturday), Nov. 4.—United States Ambassador Joseph C. Grew called at the official residence of the foreign minister at 10 a. m. today and told the Japanese government in blunt terms that it was in danger of economic pressure from the United States if it continued its present program in China.

The Ambassador's visit was the first of a series of conferences with Foreign Minister Nomura to determine what shall be done when the present Japanese-American commercial treaty, the basic agreement between the two nations, expires January 26.

It followed his sensational address of last month before the America-Japan Society in which he told the Japanese "straight from the horse's mouth" that Americans did not approve many of the actions of the Japanese armed forces in China.

"New Order" Defined

Grew was equally frank in his conversation today.

He reiterated the points he made in his October 19 address, asserting that the American people have a very clear conception of what Japan means when she says she intends to "create a new order in East Asia."

Americans believe, he said, that the proposed "new order" will be one in which American rights may be seriously curtailed.

Grew then reviewed in detail attacks on American property in China, curtailment of American rights of navigation, travel and trade, and individual acts against American citizens by armed Japanese.

Congress Mentioned

A serious situation now exists, the Ambassador said, and unless it is improved soon Japanese-American relations are likely to grow still worse.

He reminded the Japanese government that Congress would convene in regular session in January, before expiration of the present

Churchill Visits Paris to Map War at Sea

Germans Shell Rear, Seeking to Pinch Off Salient of Frontier

By the Associated Press

Paris, Nov. 3.—Winston Churchill, British first lord of the admiralty, held a series of surprise conferences with high French naval officials today regarding the war at sea while reports from the Western Front told of increased activity by German land troops.

The British naval chieftain talked for two hours with Premier Daladier, conferred twice with Cesar Campinchi, French naval minister, and lunched with Rear Admiral Jean Darlan, supreme commander of French naval forces.

After talking with the British official, Daladier called a conference of his economic advisers.

Presence Kept Secret

Churchill arrived yesterday but his presence was not disclosed until today.

Military dispatches meanwhile told of a sudden burst of German activity south of Zweibruecken, accompanied by a series of protective barrages.

The Nazi big guns opened up with heavy fire on French front lines in this shift of operations to a point about 18 miles east of Saarbrucken. Territory in rear of the French lines long vacated by the civilian population, also was bombarded.

Tonight's official communique reported a "quiet day on the whole front. Locally there have been few encounters between contact units." The morning communique said the night had been quiet, with "some artillery and infantry fire."

French Cabinet Meets

On the home front the cabinet devoted the most of a two-hour session to a review of the military and diplomatic situation by Premier Daladier.

French military sources said the Germans apparently were trying to reduce the bulge in the French frontier formed by the boundaries.

This bulge was said to have hampered German communications between strong concentrations farther east and in the western sector, which slants northward to the Luxemburg frontier.

Chicagoan in Warsaw Guard Put to Death by Nazi Troops

By the Associated Press

The State Department announced tonight that Germany, apparently without knowing he was an American citizen, had executed Josef Sadowski of Chicago.

Sadowski, whose widow, Mrs. Stefania Sadowski, lives in Chicago, was executed by German authorities in Warsaw, October 20, the department said, after having been found guilty by court-martial of having concealed a considerable quantity of arms and ammunition.

American Consul George J. Haering cabled the State Department that the consulate in Warsaw did not learn until after the execution that he was an American citizen.

Sadowski had enlisted in the Polish Civil Guard in September and was assistant chief of the Sixth Precinct of the guards in Warsaw.

The German authorities informed the consulate that Sadowski had been found guilty of a contravention of the regulations published by the German authorities upon entering Warsaw. The German authorities said Sadowski gave them no indication he was an American.

[Haering advised the department that his inquiry disclosed that there were grounds to accept the German version as true, the United Press reported.

[He said that Sadowski volunteered for service in the defense of Warsaw and served as assistant chief of the civil guard detachment which resisted the Nazi invasion until the besieged city lay in ruins.

[Department records disclosed that Sadowski obtained a passport to visit Poland last spring.

[The department's announcement did not indicate whether this government would request an official explanation from the German authorities regarding the execution.]

Finns Ready To Meet Most Soviet Terms

Helsinki Adamant Against Yielding of Hangoe, However; Reds Assail Sweden

By International News Service

Helsinki, Nov. 3.—Foreign Minister Elias Erkko revealed tonight Finland has conceded two-thirds of Russia's proposals, but was adamant in refusing to grant other Soviet demands, implying that even the threat of a Red army invasion would not force the Finnish government to change its decision.

In Moscow tonight, Finland delivered her decisive answer to Russia's demands, with tension deeply aggravated by an open Soviet allegation that the Finnish government has voiced a "direct call for war with the Soviet Union."

The note from Helsinki, outlining how far Finland is willing to go to meet Russia's proposals for Soviet military bases and territorial trades, was submitted at the Kremlin this evening to Premier Molotoff by the chief of the Finnish delegation, Dr. Juho K. Paasikivi.

Talk Lasts an Hour

The conversation, resuming the Soviet-Finnish negotiations at their most critical stage, lasted an hour, and on the question of Russia's acceptance of the Finnish reply as a basis for further bargaining depended the resumption or breakdown of the talks.

It was presumed Joseph Stalin, Molotoff and the Soviet Presidium were closely scrutinizing the Finnish reply, while the peace of the Scandinavian-Baltic region and the question of the European war's enlargement hung in the balance.

Finns Ready to Fight

Erkko's statement, given to foreign newspapermen several hours after the Communist Party paper Pravda had accused him of inviting war with the Soviet Union, was interpreted as meaning Finland now stood ready to fight if necessary.

Denying Pravda's allegation, the foreign minister voiced a scarcely veiled warning that Russia would regret any military attack on her small neighbor. He said:

"It would be sad if Russia found it necessary to take up arms while negotiations are still progressing.

"There is nothing in Finland's attitude to indicate aggressiveness. Finland never thought of starting war against anybody."

Won't Yield Hangoe

While insisting that Finland's mobilization and evacuation measures along the Russo-Finnish border were "solely of a defensive nature," Erkko made it plain that the Finns will resist to the last any Soviet steps to obtain certain Finnish territory, particularly and above all the strategic southwestern port of Hangoe, guarding the northern coast

Capone Pays Off Fines, Costs; May Go Free Nov. 19

Chicago, Nov. 3 (AP).—Al Capone, through his attorney, cleared the path today for his release from Terminal Island Prison where he is finishing an 11-year term for income tax evasion.

Attorney Abraham Teitelbaum paid to Hoyt King, clerk of the United States District Court, two checks totaling $20,000. This amount, plus the $37,892.29 paid January 4, 1939, represents the total fines and court costs assessed against the former gang leader.

Teitelbaum said $15,000 of the total was being paid under protest since Capone was convicted on only five of 22 counts and Teitelbaum felt he should be required to pay only five-twenty-seconds of the court costs.

If granted maximum time off for good behavior, Capone will be eligible for release from the Federal prison November 19.

Congress Adjourns After Passing Embargo Repeal

Federal Agency To Rule Arms Trade, Protect Defense Plans

By John G. Norris.
Post Staff Writer

War Department officials yesterday revealed the existence of a Government agency to control the flow of war orders which will follow the repeal of the arms embargo.

The agency, an interdepartmental committee functioning under the Army and Navy Munitions Board, is designed to assist foreign buyers, protect our own defense program, and build up a strong munitions industry in the United States.

Set up last June, the committee, officials said, has been quietly aiding foreign missions of both belligerents and neutrals to place war orders with American firms—the former contracts dependent, of course, upon Congress repealing the embargo. Several large aircraft orders already have been negotiated here by the Allies, it was stated, which only await formal enactment of the embargo repealer to go into effect.

Plan Purchasing Mission

[Britain's Supply Minister Leslie Burgin revealed the contemplated dispatch of a purchasing mission to the United States in hailing America as an "arsenal of unlimited resources," the Associated Press reported from London.

[He said the group would leave England as soon as it was decided what to buy, asserting that machine tools for armament production would be the heaviest immediate requirement. Besides such tools—which formerly came from Germany—Burgin said Britain would need "certain types of raw materials and ultimately some ammunition." Cotton and copper were among the materials mentioned.—Editor's note.]

The committee is headed by Col. Charles Hines, secretary of the Munitions Board, and consists of representatives of the War, Navy, State, Treasury and Justice departments. Acting Secretary of the Navy Edison and Assistant Secretary of War Johnson, as joint chairmen of the board, supervise its work.

626 Planes to Go

Repeal of the embargo, official sources said, will permit the export of 626 warplanes to Great Britain and France which were on order when the war broke out. Delivery was blocked by the old law. It was believed that many of these will be shipped from American ports within the next few days.

War Department authorities said

Three U. S. Liners Defer Sailings To British Ports

New York, Nov. 3 (U.P.).—The United States Lines announced tonight that the scheduled sailings of three passenger liners for British ports had been deferred indefinitely.

All day and into the early evening preparations had been rushed for the departure of the liners President Roosevelt, Washington and American Farmer. They apparently were hoping to leave for Europe before the new neutrality measure was effectuated by Presidential signature, banning them from the belligerent zone.

House Hoots Banquo's Ghost, Quits in Jubilant Mood

Scene On House Floor As Congress Adjourned

By James D. Secrest.
Post Staff Writer

Banquo's ghost was laughed out of the House last night as Congress adjourned in a jubilant mood that contrasted sharply with the tense seriousness that marked most of the neutrality debate.

Eager to return home in time for sectional football games, the members refused to take seriously a minor political clash that developed into fisticuffs between Michigan Representatives.

Most of them had their hats in their hands and railroad tickets in their pockets when Speaker Bankhead put an end to the special session with a rap of his gavel.

Rotund Representative Shafer (Republican), of Wisconsin, drew hoots and catcalls when he shook his finger at the majority side and declared that the sine die adjournment would haunt the members like Banquo's ghost. He was the last of several speakers who complained of what they termed "a half-baked" ruling by RFC attorneys that a drought is not a major disaster.

HOFFMAN
"Come Outside"

DINGELL
"Hit Me"

A few minutes earlier Republicans had voted solidly against adjournment despite chiding by Democratic leaders in the cloakrooms that they were playing politics and that most of them already had railroad tickets to return home.

Representative Barton (Republican), of New York, caused a mild sensation when he inadvertently voted "aye" on the resolution. A stern glance from Minority Leader Martin caused him to change it immediately to "no."

The Senate adjourned with traditional dignity, but only after a roll call. Majority leaders were beaming, moreover, just as broadly as were the House leaders.

A round of shoving and shadow boxing in the House corridor early in the afternoon was the highlight of the day. The participants were C. I. O.-baiting Representative Hoffman (Republican), of Michigan, and C. I. O.-defender Representative Dingell (Democrat), of Michigan.

After a few harmless passes it was halted by the House veteran, Representative Sabath (Democrat), of Illinois, with the lightweight title of the House still in doubt.

Dingell, a slender fellow, told reporters he weighed in at 135, while Hoffman, who looks much heavier, insisted his fighting weight was 124.

The trouble began in an exchange of remarks on the floor, some of which will appear in the Congressional Record and some of which won't. Hoffman was assailing strikers at the Bohn Aluminum Co. plant in Detroit for holding up military contracts and taking occassional jibes at the gubernatorial record of Attorney General Murphy.

Dingell jumped to Murphy's defense and Representative Lesinki (Democrat), of Michigan, joined in the fray with the remark:

"Why doesn't the Republican Governor send the militia down to shoot these people as the gentleman (Hoffman) wants them?"

A few off-the-record muttered remarks were passed as Hoffman asked that Lesinki's words be taken down for censure and the latter withdrew them. As Representative Hook, another Michigan Democrat, entered the scrap with an accusation that Hoffman had altered the record in a previous verbal exchange, Hoffman and Dingell walked to the corridor adjoining the chamber.

"Come outside and repeat those words and I'll smack you down,"

$3,500,000 Harbor Expansion Is Projected for Alexandria

Plans for a $3,500,000 development of the Alexandria waterfront were disclosed last night as the Virginia city celebrated arrival of the 6,200-ton Canadian steamship Markland, loaded with newsprint for The Washington Post.

The harbor program, as drafted by civic officials and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, calls for construction of an elevated spur of the Mt. Vernon Memorial Boulevard, to border Alexandria's Potomac shoreline.

Dredging operations would broaden the anchorage available to ocean-going vessels, while docks running below the highway would connect ships and warehouses.

The proposed development was outlined by Carl Budwesky, Alexandria city manager, at a reception given aboard the Markland by the Mersey Paper Co., Ltd., owners of the ship; the Robinson Terminal Warehouse Corp., and The Post.

A $45,000 warehouse has been built by the Robinson firm for storage of the Markland's cargo before delivery by truck to The Post. The ship will unload at Alexandria every six weeks.

Confidence in a revival of Alexandria's once flourishing maritime commerce was voiced yesterday by two dozen Federal and civic officials who visited the Markland.

R. Walton Moore, Counselor of the State Department, recalling the days of Alexandria's shipping glory and the port's post-Civil War decline, said [illegible] today "in a new springtime."

Docking of the Markland strengthens his conviction, Moore said, "that in spite of all reverses and difficulties, Alexandria is now marching forward in many directions."

"Every evidence of the growth of trade on our inland waterways is welcome to the Army," said Assist-

Act Effective At Noon Today With Signature By President

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

With an inspired final flourish, Congress last night dispatched to the President a new cash-and-carry neutrality act repealing the arms embargo, then as swiftly adjourned, sine die.

The closing gavel fell in the Senate at 6:17 p. m. and the House took its leave at 6:35.

Racing at top speed all day to give immediate legal effect to America's new anti-war formula, the second session of the Seventy-sixth Congress completed the task for which it was summoned, with its eyes homeward.

Adjournment came quietly, with House and Senate majorities overwhelming Republican roll call efforts to hold Congress in session through the "war emergency."

Only the final bold stroke of the President's signature at noon White House ceremonies today remained to write "Repeal" on the statute books and set up the most comprehensive shipping, credit and regulatory safeguards any Nation ever imposed in an effort to stay clear of war.

At a press conference, the President told reporters the bill marks this Nation's return to its historic conception of neutrality.

Prepares Proclamation

Preparing the proclamations he may issue today to give force to the law, Mr. Roosevelt meanwhile conferred with Secretary of State Hull and Assistant Secretary Berle.

Conference agreement on the new measure was reached in mid-afternoon. The completed draft followed throughout the pattern of the Administration-approved Senate bill, with only minor modifications.

The report, with only Republican conferees dissenting, was carried immediately before the Senate where it was approved by a 55 to 24 vote.

Discarding its normal 24-hour lay-over rule, the House unanimously called up the report messaged over from the Senate. An hour of debate followed, with the House isolationist opposition renewing its protests and the Democratic bill sponsors rebutting the attack. A roll call was ordered and the report was approved in final form by 243 to 172, a majority of 71.

Before the House had voted final passage of the bill, Senate Majority Leader Barkley had set in motion the sine die adjournment resolution that was to close drably the special session just six weeks and one day from the date it convened. Machine-like, the Senate approved it, 43 to 25.

End Is Anti-Climactic

Across the Capitol, Minority Leader Martin had sworn to make an issue of adjournment, stating his belief that Congress should remain in session until war clouds passed. Martin registered his protest by demanding a roll call vote on the sine die motion. The House responded with a 223 to 189 vote to go home.

Thus ended the colorless adjournment anti-climax to Thursday's dramatic decision clearing the way for repeal of the embargo and adoption of a formula for regulating wartime trade in all commodities with belligerents.

Lacking were all of the usual adjournment festivities and save for farewells the session ended as somberly as it began.

Speeding Congress on its way, the

U. S. Expects Business to Be Best Since '29

Industrial Output Index Estimated At 120 for October

By Felix Cotten.

Output of industrial plants for the remainder of the year is likely to be at the highest level since 1929, the Federal Reserve Board revealed yesterday.

Th board estimated that its industrial production index, which is adjusted for seasonal variation, would be 120 per cent of the 1923-25 average in October.

If the estimate proves correct, it will be only one point under the December, 1936, peak. In that month production rose to 121 per cent of the 1923-25 average, then dropped slightly.

Orders to Sustain Activity

"In many industries," the board said, "the volume of orders on hand appears to be large enough to sustain activity at a high level at least to the end of the year."

This, Government economists believe, indicates that industry has entered upon an even heavier period of activity than prevailed in the latter part of 1936 and early months of 1937. In other words, output probably will be the heaviest since 1929.

At the same time the question is being raised as to how long it will last. Hope is high in Wall Street, according to an Associated Press dispatch, that recovery at last may be beginning to click. Yet many financial district economists have their fingers crossed, the dispatch said.

Consumption, Exports Lag

The Reserve Board added a word of caution. Consumption of goods by individuals, utilization of materials through outlays for capital goods, and commodity exports "have increased much less rapidly than production," the board said.

"Unless there is considerable increase in the absorption of goods through these channels," the board commented, "the accumulation of inventories which is now under way is likely to reach substantial proportions."

Not only industrial output, but employment and pay rolls, have shown rapid strides following the "buying wave and rise in prices that began with the outbreak of war," the board said.

Buying Subsidized

Buying, which was especially active in most primary markets in the first half of September, has since subsided. Demand for semi-finished and finished products, however, has been maintained in large part, although new orders from some products have dropped off.

"It appears," the board said, "that the heavy buying has reflected the increased need for materials required in connection with increased production, the growth in inventories to correspond to this enlarged activity, and the desire of some manufacturers and distributors to be protected in case prices should advance or delays in deliveries should occur."

Wall Street Not Afraid

Wall Street, according to the Associated Press, felt that the danger of burdensome inventories was not imminent. The National City Bank, it was recalled, pointed out that market excitement had quieted, that price advances had kept within moderate limits, and that "inventory accumulations that are expected to cause the trouble are still only prospective, in most cases."

Administration economists blamed the recession on "speculative inventory buying in the latter part of 1936, and it was this buying, they said, that caused the bulge in industrial production in late 1936 and early 1937. Inventory accumulations, they argued, resulted in an inevitable decline in production later.

The tone of optimism noted in Wall street was due, in part, to the accelerated advance in business since last spring. More than a third of the advance, according to Reserve Board statistics, occurred before the outbreak of war.

Many Inquiries From Abroad

The board commented that "inquiries from abroad have been in large volume and foreign sales in some industries have expanded, while in others foreign business is smaller than before the outbreak of the war." Part of the increased foreign business is with belligerents, economists said, and part with Latin-American countries.

Gains in consumption were regarded in some quarters as encouraging. The magazine "Business Week" said "the volume of retail turnover in the 1939 buying season almost certainly will be the best since the last three months of 1930." The Reserve Board said retail distribution of general merchandise had shown a rise beginning before the outbreak of war, and that "sales of electrical equipment, furniture, and other durable consumers' goods are reported to have increased considerably."

Stores' Sales Rising

Department store sales, the Board remarked, have reached the level attained in 1937, while sales by mail order houses and chain stores have risen above 1937 levels.

Buying of industrial equipment and improvement of plant, regarded by some observers as one of the most encouraging aspects of the present recovery picture, has expanded, the Board said, particularly in the metal-working and railroad industries. The volume of factory building, however, remains comparatively low. Contracts for residential building, which for several months have ben at the highest level in recent years, continue large, the Board pointed out.

Current reports, the board said, indicate that "consideration is being given in many instances to the possibility of plant expansion if present high levels of output are sustained for any great length of time."

Secretary of Commerce Hopkins announced that consumer purchases in the first nine months of 1939 were $1,700,000,000 greater than in the same period of 1938. The volume of service wholesale business in the same period, he said, totaled about $15,000,000,000, or about $1,000,000,000 more than in the corresponding period of 1938.

Bitter Neutrality Battle Ends in Smiles

President messaged his "congratulations and good wishes" to members of both Houses through Vice President Garner and Speaker Bankhead.

"I hope that world events will not make it necessary to have any other extraordinary session—and, therefore, in anticipation of seeing you all on the third of January next, I extend to you in the meantime my best wishes for a Happy Thanksgiving and a Merry Christmas," wrote the President.

Then, recalling his controversial proclamation moving up Thanksgiving one week, he added wryly his "hope" that "those members from States whose Governors have set November 30 as Thanksgiving Day will celebrate both Thanksgivings—the 23d and the 30th."

Conference agreement on the revised neutrality bill, almost a routine formality after the earlier determining action by both Houses, brought only three changes in the completed draft.

A "preamble" by Senator Conally (Democrat), of Texas, stating the objective of the legislation, which had precipitated sharp controversy when originally proposed in the Senate, was added to the bill.

U. S. Ships Given Seven Days

Ships of neutral nations bound for outlying belligerent territories, were exempted from a requirement that title on nonmilitary goods carried by them must be transferred to purchasers before shipment, a privilege extended previously only to American vessels. This exemption would cease, however, if the neutral ships traveled through "combat zones" proclaimed by the President.

A third change gave all American vessels leaving for belligerent ports in advance of the signing of the act by the President the right to complete their voyages without penalties imposed by the act. This modified a Senate provision that ships must have started such voyage seven days before enactment of the bill.

A minor change exempted the charge accounts of radio, telegraph, telephone and cable companies from the rigid credit restrictions of the bill.

No U. S. Rights Waived

The new preamble approved by the conferees provides:

"Whereas the United States of America, desiring to preserve its neutrality in war between foreign states, and being desirous of avoiding involvement therein, voluntarily imposes upon its nationals by domestic legislation the restrictions set out herein.

"By so doing it waives no right of itself, or of any national of the United States, under international law and expressly reserves all rights and privileges to which it or its nationals are entitled under the law of nations.

"It expressly reserves the right to repeal or change or modify this or other domestic legislation in the interest of peace, security, or welfare of the United States and its people."

The completed bill was signed by Chairman Pittman, of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, author of the Senate measure, and Senate Democratic conferees George of Georgia, Wagner of New York, and Connally of Texas.

Borah Hasn't "Changed "

The name of Chairman Bloom, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, led the House signatures, followed by the names of Representatives Johnson, of Texas, and Kee, of West Virginia, Democrats.

Senators Borah, of Idaho and Johnson, of California, the famed pair that led the Senate isolationist attack, did not sign the report, neither did the House Republican conferees, Representatives Fish, of New York and Eaton of New Jersey.

Asked if he was satisfied with the final draft, Pittman smiled. "I think it's perfect," he said. "It is a magnificent bill."

Borah, who fought repeal features with all of his oratorical powers, retorted grimly:

"I haven't changed my views."

Senate consideration of the conference report was perfunctory, isolationists recognizing further fight to be useless in the face of last week's 63 to 30 Senate passage of the bill.

Vice President Garner started to bang it through by unanimous consent, but Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, protested; "Oh, no, Mr. President, we want a roll call."

"The chair was merely trying to test the sentiment," said Garner.

The vote came within 10 minutes, after Senator Pittman explained the report.

In the House, Representative Fish took the floor to shout a final taunt in the face of passage.

"We have made our fight," said Fish. "We have no complaint to make now. But the great issue has just begun. That is keeping America out of foreign wars."

The New York Republican declared that unless the President proclaims "war zone" shipping restrictions, unrestricted submarine warfare by Germany may bring the loss of American ships in the North Sea and the British channel.

He told Southern members who voted for repeal in a body that the British were planning to discontinue purchase of their farm products and use their ships instead to transport American munitions. And he charged that the bill contained a credit "loophole" that would permit British subjects to negotiate loans with American financiers, use the credit to buy American scrap iron and turn it over to their government.

House Administration sponsors of the bill, satisfied with their victory, offered only a brief explanation of the measure by Chairman Bloom, and a short retort to Fish by Representative Kee. Kee said Fish had only repeated arguments made during consideration of the bill. He said conferences changes were merely clarifying and conferees had brought back substantially the Senate bill.

"This is the best possible act," said Kee, "that could be passed to keep the United States out of the conflict that is raging in Europe."

Roosevelt Rules Out Arms For Enforcing Neutral Zone

In the face of criticism of the wide "neutrality zone" established around the Americas, the United States stuck by the plan yesterday although making known that it had no intention of using force to prevent belligerent activity within the area.

President Roosevelt said at his conference that the zone plan was now in effect. The State Department later made public a memorandum saying there is no implication of "force on the part of any American republic." This indicated that enforcement would be by diplomatic pressure.

The zone, varying from 250 to 1,250 miles in width, was established by American republics through the recent Declaration of Panama. The idea was to keep hostilities between the European nations at a distance from American shores.

Landon Is Critical

Alfred M. Landon recently objected that the "hazy new zone" raised many questions fraught with peril for United States neutarlity. He also said it would be impossible to enforce the zone program.

Questioned about this, Mr. Roosevelt said merely that a good many people had failed to read the Declaration of Panama.

In response to other questions, Mr. Roosevelt said he did not think the neutrality zone gave protection to the 80-odd German ships now in Western Hemisphere ports if they sought to operate shipping lines within the zone.

Information reaching here is that six nations are now maintaining patrols of the zone—the United States, Brazil, Uruguay, Argentina, Chile and Ecuador.

The State Department emphasized that the patrol provisions "provide for nothing more than the kind of patrol which the Government of the United States and several other American governments have recently undertaken.

"The purpose of the patrol proposed is to enable the governments of the American nations to obtain the fullest information possible with regard to what is going on within the restricted area.

"It must be apparent that in times such as these it is of the utmost importance in the interest of the preservation of the neutrality of this hemisphere that each American nation have the fullest possible advice as to the activities undertaken within the waters near its coasts."

The Declaration of Panama has been communicated to Great Britain, Germany and France, but no replies have been received from them. Britain and France have indicated unofficially that it was up to the belligerents to decide whether to accept the zone.

Fr. Schulte to Put Cross in Sky at Football Game

The Rev. Paul Schulte, famed "Flying Priest of the Arctic," last night challenged a throng at St. Matthew's Cathedral to continue "missionary-mindedness."

Father Schulte, who said he would outline the Cross of Calvary in the air above the Yankee Stadium at today's Notre Dame-Army football game, described the hardships of a priest's life in the Arctic.

If people better understood the sufferings and hardships of the missionary, they would give stronger encouragement to mission enterprises, he said.

Kin of Justice Tells of Ore Price Fixing

Nephew of Butler Consulted With 'Big Four,' He Testifies

By the Associated Press

Patrick Butler, a nephew of Associate Justice Pierce Butler of the Supreme Court, testified before the monopoly committee yesterday that he "had consulted with the Big Four" of the iron ore industry in order to avoid "price cutting" on ore contracts for the Ford Motor Company.

Butler identified letters he had written from 1929 to 1934 to his father, Emmett Butler, head of Butler Brothers, a St. Paul iron ore firm, regarding bids for the Ford business.

These told of conversations with leading iron ore merchants in Cleveland about prices before the Butler firm submitted its annual bids.

"Was it customary for you to consult with your competitors before submitting bids on the Ford contract?" A. N. Feller, committee counsel, asked Butler.

"From these letters I evidently did," Butler replied.

One of Butler's letters, on August 4, 1931, said it would be a "dangerous thing" to cut prices on the Ford bid because "the Ford business is the only open market business left and if this is not maintained I do not know what would become of our long-term prices that are based on the market price.

"We will, however, consult with the Big Four beforehand to assure ourselves that they will not try any such tricks."

Big Four Identified

Feller asked Butler to identify the "Big Four." The witness said they were Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co., Oglebay, Norton & Co., the M. A. Hanna Co., and Pickands, Mather & Co., all of Cleveland.

Another Butler letter of March 28, 1929, opposed a bid for the Ford contract at below the base price for iron ore because "there would be too much danger of the corporation learning that we were using any other basis."

Butler said "the corporation" referred to the United States Steel Corporation.

The 1931 letter also stated "now that Quinn is practically out of business, I believe the ore market can be more closely controlled."

Three Days of Testimony

Asked to explain this, Butler said Quinn was a former independent ore supplier.

Feller asked who "would do the controlling of prices, the Big Four?"

Butler replied in the affirmative, explaining they then would be supplying most of the ore to major steel companies.

The Butler letters were introduced after three days of testimony about iron ore merchants and how iron ore prices had been kept at even levels for the past 14 years, while prices of finished steel products and all other commodities varied widely.

Gerig Predicts New League Will Rise After War Is Over

National Sacrificees Needed to Make It Work, He Declares

The League of Nations has spent 20 years in search for a way to preserve international order, but to make its findings more effective "will require certain national sacrifices," Dr. Benjamin Gerig, League of Nations commissioner for the World's Fair, said last night.

He spoke at a graduate convocation at American University, where Chancellor Gray conferred seven degrees of master of arts and two of doctor of philosophy before a gathering of students, professors and trustees of the university.

The "so-called failure" of the League was owing not to lack of the proper machinery but to lack of "the necessary will to make it work," declared Dr. Gerig. The League, he said, was based on the assumption that "a fundamental settlement existed in 1919, and that whatever remaining wars there might be would be limited wars quite easily capable of adjustment.

Settlement Nonexistent

"This settlement," he added, "did not in reality exist." In its place appeared an ideological conflict on a world-wide scale, an "exaggerated nationalism in many countries old and new which . . . led to an almost complete disruption in noraml economic and financial relations," and a habit of flouting international law.

The main problem in international relations, as in all human affairs, was to set a proper balance between liberty and law, he said. "I think that most thoughtful men will today agree that by submitting to varying degrees of regulation they have found that a larger freedom was actually realized."

In an interview before his address Dr. Gerig said the war would probably be followed by more organized co-operation among European states, through revision of the League or the creation of a similar organization.

The form the new League would take would depend on the "nature and kind of national state which will emerge from the war," he said, for if a wave of Communist revolutions brought the Soviet Union to the Atlantic little could be saved in the present covenant. But "a League based on the principles of liberal democracy nearly worked, and this time we may make it work," he added.

Speaks Unofficially

Gerig, who has been attached to the League secretariat for ten years, emphasized that he spoke "not officially but as an interested and objective observer."

Those receiving degrees last night were, master of arts, Arthur Grandin Conover, of Arlington, Va.; John Sterling deBeers, of Chicago; Doris Detre, of Washington; Leonard Lipman Fischman, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Nathan Morris Koffsky, of Washington.

Master of arts in public administration, Rober Oakes Boyd, of Takoma, Wash., and Wendell Erasmus Little, of Arlington.

Doctor of philosophy, Francis Elton Atwater, of Elmira, N. Y., and Thomas Lowe Bransford, of Arlington.

Judge Finds Conspiracy In Aluminum

Evidence Warrants Verdict by Jury in Civil Suit, Caffey Says

By the Associated Press

The Justice Department announced yesterday receipt of an opinion from Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey, presiding in the aluminum monopoly trial at New York, holding that the Government had presented sufficient evidence to warrant a jury in finding the existence of a conspiracy among the principal defendants.

The action is a civil suit against the Aluminum Company of America, Aluminum Limited, a Canadian firm, and 61 other defendants, charging that these companies and the British, French, Swiss and German aluminum companies controlled production and price of the metal through a world cartel known as Alliance Aluminum Company.

The trial began June 1, 1938, and will be resumed November 8 after a three-month recess. The Government completed its evidence June 1 and the defendants have introduced only a portion of their proof.

Letters Held Admissible

The Justice Department said the effect of Judge Caffey's 20-page opinion would be to make admissible as evidence "letters written by the foreign aluminum producers in furtherance of the conspiracy."

The statement noted that Judge Caffey had reserved until conclusion of the trial any ruling as to the effect of Aluminum Limited's conduct outside of the United States, although Judge Vincent L. Liebell had held early in the progress of the case that the Canadian firm was subject to the jurisdiction of United States courts.

Judge Caffey made it clear, the department said, "that he will not decide any of the ultimate issues in the case until the conclusion of the trial."

U. S. Requested Opinion

The opinion was given at the request of the government, which wanted to introduce the letters, the Justice Department said.

The department's statement quoted the judge's opinion as saying that the record contained "enough to warrant rendition by a jury of a verdict, which it would be improper to disturb," that the Aluminum Company of America, Aluminum Limited, and the British, French, Swiss and German aluminum companies were engaged in a conspiracy.

The Government has contended that these companies conspired to allocate world markets as well as fix prices.

Congressman Would Oust Red Partisans

Taylor Urges Ridding Civil Service of All With Pink Tinge

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

A Republican member of the powerful Rules Committee yesterday asked Congress to prevent sympathizers with Communist front organizations from remaining in Government service.

Lauding the "revelations" of the Dies Committee, Representative Taylor, of Tennessee, asserted that "the investigation has uncovered hundreds of Government civil employes who have membership in Communist front organizations or who have shown a tolerance or sympathy for such."

With a call for laws "to put an end to this disgraceful spectacle," Taylor said that "legislation to end this stark travesty should be introduced and vigorously pressed to passage."

Although he did not mention it by name, Taylor was understood to be referring to the recently published list of alleged members of the American League for Peace and Democracy who are in Government service.

The demand of Chairman Dies that the league be investigated by the Department of Justice was answered yesterday in a letter to Dies from Attorney General Murphy.

Differs on Tactics

Stating that departmental agents will examine all the committee's evidence against the league, Murphy told Dies that the tests to be applied for a criminal prosecution "are not the same as those which are applicable to hearings before a Congressional committee."

"In the performance of its duty to enforce compliance with the laws," said Murphy, "it is the obligation of the department to safeguard . . the rights of citizens as well. At the cost of whatever inconvenience and annoyance to individual citizens and Government officials, the fundamental rights and privileges of free assembly, free opinion and free speech, as guaranteed by Federal and State constitutions, must be respected and observed."

Meanwhile, the committee hearings came to an abrupt but temporary halt yesterday soon after the chairman had ordered an investigation of union organization activities in the Canal Zone.

Scheduled afternoon testimony was suspended when it became apparent that adjournment of the House was imminent. Hearings probably will be resumed November 20 by a subcommittee under chairmanship of Representative Starnes (Democrat), of Alabama.

Chairman Dies, who intends to visit his home in Texas for a three weeks rest, is now considering the possibility of establishing a one-man subcommittee in New Orleans to inquire into the murder charge against William C. McCuistion, committee witness.

Dies said yesterday he would confer with New Orleans police and might interview a number of witnesses to determine whether the allegation against McCuistion is a "frame-up."

McCuistion, who has been jailed here at request of New Orleans authorities, yesterday refused to return voluntarily to Louisiana and thereby contradicted indications he had given earlier in the week that he would gladly go back.

Asks Delay

Arraigned before Judge Walter J. Casey in Police Court, McCuistion told the clerk he wanted the usual 30 days in which to fight extradition. He is charged with the murder of Philip Carey, a National Maritime Union official, in New Orleans on September 17.

Bail was denied McCuiston at request of Assistant District Attorney Stephen Haycock. The accused man was not represented by counsel.

Dies explained McCuiston's refusal to waive extradition proceedings with the statement: "He wants time to learn more about the charges against him."

In an announcement released yesterday, the National Maritime Union, from which McCuiston was expelled last summer, charged that he and Frederick C. Phillips, another committee witness, belonged to a group of "labor spies."

Phillips, a former N. M. U. official, told the committee that H. A. Stoudt, a C. I. O. organizer in the Canal Zone, is a Communist. The witness said that Stoudt obtained his job through influence of John L. Lewis, C. I. O. chieftain, on recommendation of Joseph Curran, president of the N. M. U.

Says Canal Was Objective

Phillips, who claimed he was expelled from the union because of his anti-Communist activity, testified that Curran had stressed the need "to lay the basis for work among the 16,000 civil employes" in the Canal Zone.

Representative Thomas (Republican), of New Jersey, wanted to know why a union of off-shore workers should be interested in organizing on-shore workers "at this critical time."

Phillips said he was unable to give details, because he was "on the outs" with the union, but he knew that the subject had been discussed several times at union headquarters this year.

The witness stated that anti-Communists were accused of "red-baiting," of being "shipowners' stooges" and "labor spies."

Striking Dock Workers Spurn U. S. Mediation

Charges Bloc With Communist Sympathies; 6 Sailings Canceled

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 3.—Striking A. F. of L. longshoremen caused the cancellation today of at least six scheduled coastwise sailings, while their leader sharply rejected mediation by the National Maritime Labor Board, accusing one of its members of bias for "the communistic dual longshoremen organization on the Pacific Coast."

Joseph P. Ryan, president of the International Longshoremen's Association, thus answered the offer of Robert W. Bruere, the board's chairman, to assign Conciliator James L. Bernard to the controversy:

"We do not need the services of Mediator Bernard. We can settle this with our employers."

Subsequently Ryan added:

"As far as our organization is concerned, we have no confidence in the Maritime Labor Board while Dr. Louis Block is a member of it, as we know that his sympathies are with the communistic dual longshoremen organization on the Pacific Coast.

"We would like to see the Maritime Labor Board abolished. In addition to the board, we will have nothing to do with Bernard as a mediator."

The reference to the Western "dual organization" was to the CIO's International Longshoremen and Warehousemen Association, headed by Harry Bridges, whom Ryan frequently has characterized as a "Communist."

The issue in the strike is one of pay.

Market Head Goes to Market, Merchants May Go to Jail

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 3.—William Fellows Morgan, jr., the city commissioner of markets, went on a seven-hour shopping tour today and returned to report that he was cheated at every place he made a purchase.

The trip was motivated, he said, by many complaints by housewives of overcharges and short weights.

What Customer Morgan asked for, what he really got, and what happened then follows as he described it:

Three women's clothing stores; stockings advertised as "pure silk;" found to be cheap substitutes; three summonses.

Filling station: Five gallons of gas; measured a pint short; one summons.

Butcher shop; two chickens, each a quarter-pound short; same dealer had a window sign advertising chickens at 16 cents a pound, but sold it at 18 cents. One summons.

Fancy grocery store; "Roquefort cheese" turned out to be phoney. One summons.

Said Morgan:

"I certainly was surprised. . . . It is unfortunate that housewives are imposed upon, particularly in this period of rising prices. . . . I intend to make examples of the dealers who tried to defraud me today."

If This Gadget Could Cook!

Chicago, Nov. 3 (AP).—Auburn Taylor has notified the National Inventors' Congress that it's no longer necessary for men to stoop over to pull on their pants.

From his home in Charleston, W. Va., he has dispatched plans and specifications for the Taylor valet chamber, or fireman's friend.

It shoots your pants on in a flash. An accessory also helps you with your shoes and socks, slipping them on or off with scarcely the requirement of a downward glance.

Taylor's brainchild is a neat little cabinet, in which lie a conventional pair of trousers, crouched and ready to spring up your shins.

Old Man River Lets In the Sea

New Orleans, La., Nov 3 (AP).—Salt water from the 110-mile distant Gulf of Mexico flowed through New Orleans city water mains today for the second time in more than forty years and speckled trout were being caught at the foot of Canal street for the first time in memory.

Due to prolonged drought through its entire watershed, the Mississippi has reached an almost record low and gulf tides flowed into the long delta channel. The city's water supply is taken from the river. Authorities said the salt content is yet below Government requirements. The mains were saline for a time in 1936.

The ordinarily tawny river which rushes millions of tons of yellow clay and black soil past New Orleans annually has turned a placid, gulf blue.

He-Man Pills Success for Four

New York, Nov. 3 (AP).—The New York World-Telegram in a copyright story today said four young men exhibited to a group of doctors at the Postgraduate Hospital had been transformed "from tragic youths with piping voices into normal, virile men."

"Their virility and vigorous appearance was due to the fact that each had implanted under his skin, between two of his ribs, a synthetic white tablet of pure crystalline testosterone, a synthetic male hormone," the article said.

Dr. Joseph Eidelsberg, director of the hospital's ductless gland study who described the treatment, said that when the youths first came to the hospital their contours were feminine and their male characteristics suppressed.

Frozen Sleep Combats Drugs

New York, Nov. 3.—Use of frozen sleep to cure narcotic addiction and mental trouble was announced here today. This is the first time that this new human hibernation has been reported for anything except cancer.

Disclosure of the new benefits came out incidentally during a report on the cancer cases to a symposium on temperature by Doctors Temple Fay and L. W. Smith, of Philadelphia, the men who originated the frozen sleep less than a year ago.

There were three narcotic addicts, all physicians. They were victims of one of the derivatives of morphine. None of them had cancer.

Each one was put to sleep by packing in ice and the body temperature lowered to about 89. Each one slept thus for five days. On awakening each was free from the desire for the narcotic.

The mental case was a woman suffering from psychosis following a surgical operation. She was violent and screaming. Twenty-four hours of frozen sleep cleared her mind for three days, when violence again returned.

Thereupon hibernation was used for seven days and since then has been no return of the mental difficulties.

Pet Cow Stolen, Sold to Butcher; Two Arrested as Children Cry

Five youngsters on a farm near White Oaks, Md., can keep their shoes tied now, but they're not at all happy about it.

They had a cow they called Shoestring because she would nibble at their shoetops and undo the strings, and they thought that was very fine and very funny. And now that's all over.

Montgomery County police yesterday arrested two men who they said had stolen the children's pet and sold her to a Baltimore slaughter house. The police are trying now to get her hide so they can prove their case. Meanwhile, they lodged grand larceny charges against Joseph Magner, 44, of Seeks Corner, and Frank Williams, 30, of Takoma Park.

Police were investigating 15 other reports of cattle theft in Montgomery and Prince Georges County during the past three months. One livestock breeder reported loss of five heifers in one night.

The pet whose loss is the basis of the arrests made yesterday was sold, police said, in the Union Stockyards at Baltimore for $62.

Her owner, Latney Greenfield, and his five children thought that was pretty cheap for Shoestring. The children and their mother had no comment but some of them were crying. But Greenfield made a statement.

"I raised her from a calf," he said. "She was a good milk cow, too. We got five gallons a day from her. It's going to be hard to get along without her."

'Slow-Downs' Laid To Labor Board

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States yesterday charged the "slow-down strike," like the sit-down strike, had its origin in the Labor Relations Act.

Labor's newest weapon—the "slow-down strike"—is "just as unlawful" as the sit-down strike, the chamber said in its publication, the Washington Review.

Germans Seek Air Base In Chile for Lufthansa

Copyright by New York Times.

Santiago, Chile, Nov. 3.—A new publication named Critica draws attention today to the fact that the German Lufthansa Air Line has asked authorization for its planes traveling between Lima, Peru, and La Paz, Bolivia, to land at Chile's northern port, Arica. It terms the request surprising, since the German planes can now use the Peruvian air base at Tacna.

The paper suggests the plea may conceal an intention to establish an air base to support the activities of German sea raiders.

Half Billion Miles Flown Safely

President Roosevelt noted the fact yesterday that American domestic air lines have operated 500,000,000 passenger miles without an accident.

He read at his press conference a report from Chairman Robert H. Hinckley of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, which said that this record had been reached Thursday night by the 17 scheduled air lines operating in the United States.

It said that in the last seven months and seven days the air carriers had taken the equivalent of the entire population of the District of Columbia to Boston and back without a death or a single accident. Smilingly, Mr. Roosevelt suggested that everybody rap on wood and that Washington and Boston papers please copy.

Allies Prepare For 3 Months Of Inactivity

Armies to Be Sent To Winter Quarters; Nazi Surprise Unlikely

By G. H. Archambault.

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Nov. 3.—Two months after the war began, public opinion is being prepared for the seeming inevitability of the Allied armies going into winter quarters. In those two months no battle has been fought, casualties have been negligible, the respective armies are virtually on their frontier lines and outside the war zone life proceeds normally.

Unless the Germans spring a surprise which is now considered scarcely likely, the troops will be practically inactive for at least three months. A few army corps, relieving each other periodically, would suffice to hold the front. Nevertheless, there could be no thought of even partial demobilization; the armies must remain ready for instant action.

This situation has been brought about by two factors—the Allies' decision not to engage in "any rash offensives" and what is described here as Fuehrer Hitler's indecision.

Hitler Directs All Moves

In democracies the conduct of war is the prerogative of the government (in the present case represented by the Allied war council) and the commander-in-chief is entrusted solely with the conduct of operations. In the Third Reich it is evident that the Feuhrer conducts both, therefore any hesitation or indecision must be his. Credible information obtained here from what are described as unimpeachable German sources, pictures his position thus:

Having made the initial error of facing the weaker opponent (Poland) first, he gave the Allies full time to prepare in the west. Then he transferred all his forces to the west wall. For days everything has been ready on the German side for a mass offensive in answer to Hitler's signal. But that signal does not come. Even when the French withdrew their advanced forces, it took him two days to make up his mind to advance in their tracks. The signal does not come because Hitler has examined the western situation in all its aspects—and hesitates.

Staff Blocked Attack

Towards the beginning of the war, the information continues, Hitler declared that even though breaking through the Maginot Line cost 1,800,000 men it would be worth the price.

The general staff insisted it would be suicidal and succeeded in dissuading him.

Next, according to this source, Field Marshal Goering was asked to prepare a plan for a mass aerial attack upon Great Britain. After taking into account all factors, including the consumption of gasoline and weight of the bombs to be carried, Goering reported that an operation of this sort would be impossible without bases on the North Sea, in Belgium preferably to Holland. Gen. Franz Halder was instructed to prepare a plan for the invasion of Belgium. A few days later, he reported, he could not recommend such an operation and offered his resignation. It was refused.

Since then, according to the same source, the German armies have continued to await orders, but, seemingly, Hitler still awaits an inspiration. He passes most of his time in the newly created migration department, consulting maps and elaborating the scheme for repatriation of German minorities, everywhere they exist. In brief, having created a mighty army he could use as a menace to obtain his ends in "white" wars, he now is at a loss as to how to use it in a real war.

U. S. Warns Tokyo To Respect Rights

basic Japanese-American treaty, which has been denounced by President Roosevelt.

If Japanese-American relations are not improved by that time, he said, it may be expected there will be a demand by many Americans for an embargo on sales of all American products to Japan.

The United States expects both "negative and positive" action by the Japanese government, the Ambassador said.

On the negative side it expects a cessation of all anti-American actions by Japanese in China.

On the positive side it expects "concrete evidence of the intention of the Japanese government to effect an improvement in the situation which has existed."

It was the strongest action taken by any power to protect its interest in China since the Chinese-Japanese war started in July, 1936, and was doubly important in that it came while Japan was preparing openly to launch a new "national government" of China in Nanking under former Chinese Premier Wang Ching-Wei.

Tokyo to Bide Time

There was no immediate indication as to how Japan would reply, but on the basis of previous statements by Japanese leaders it seemed certain Tokyo would go ahead with her plans in China and trust to time to find a way of appeasing the United States.

Earlier Premier Gen. Nobuyuki Abe had told newspapermen, during a general discussion of Japanese foreign policy, that the new China regime in Nanking might be organized "sooner than had been expected."

Official Thanks Grew

The foreign minister, it was understood, heard the Ambassador's remarks without interruption, and then thanked Grew for his frank exposition of the American viewpoint.

Japan, he said, is anxious to adjust her relations with the United States and other third powers, and feels that these adjustments should be "correlated" with Japanese policy in supporting the Chinese movement headed by Wang Chin-Wei, who represents a large section of the Chinese people and the "orthodox" wing of the Kuomintang (Chinese Nationalist Party).

Until the Moscow announcement, the Government-owned United States Line, which leased the City of Flint from the United States Maritime Commission, had had no definite word of her whereabouts.

She had put into Tromsoe for water but there had been no official report to her American owners.

Messages Failed

The Russian government said that the prize crew took the City of Flint to Murmansk to repair damage to her engines. This was permissible under international law which provides that prize ships captured by belligerents may put into neutral ports for such emergencies.

United States Ambassador Laurence A. Steinhardt made repeated efforts to reach the ship's captain at Murmansk by telephone but failed.

Similar efforts to obtain information from the Soviet government as to the ship and her crew of 41 brought only scant information from Moscow officials.

Uncertainty shrouded the status of the City of Flint until the Soviet government announced October 26 that she had sailed from Murmansk under the American flag after an investigation of her cargo and completion of engine repairs.

The lack of information came from the Kremlin concerning the City of Flint brought from Washington a charge that Soviet officials "withheld adequate cooperation."

It was not until the freighter was well at sea that it was learned that the German prize crew was taking her toward Germany in an effort to run the British blockade.

Then Norwegian officials announced that the prize crew had the right to take her through Norwegian territorial waters and put two warships on her trail to see that she observed international law.

In a seagoing game of hide-and-seek, the ship made her way carefully down the coast of Norway. Secretary of State Cordell Hull instructed the American embassies in Germany and Britian to ask that no action be taken endangering her American crew.

Keeping to neutral waters, she worked her way past Lodigen Light, 600 miles north of Bergen, Wednesday, and the next day passed Maaloy, 110 miles north of Bergen.

She was reported to have observed international regulations until she anchored in Haugesund harbor.

Figured in Rescue

Officials would not say early today whether she had sailed with her American crew again in charge. A well-informed source said, however, that the Norwegian ruling which released her gave her the right to sail and that it was positive there was no likelihood the ship herself would be held by any Norwegian action.

The capture of the City of Flint by the Deutschland was the second stirring episode in which she figured since the European war started. On September 3 she took aboard 220 survivors of the sunken British liner Athenia.

Capt. J. A. Gainard, a veteran of the sea, brought the survivors to Halifax and New York, and on his next trip toward Europe ran into capture by the Deutschland.

At the time the Nazi pocket battleship hailed the City of Flint, the German commander placed 38 surviving crewmen of the torpedoed British freighter Stonegate aboard along with the prize crew of 18.

The Stonegate survivors were landed at Tromsoe on the vessel's northern voyage to Murmansk.

Berlin, Saturday, Nov. 4 (U.P.).—Spokesmen at the Foreign Office and Ministry of Propaganda both professed complete ignorance early today of the internment by Norway of the German prize crew of the United States ship City of Flint.

They declined to make any comment whatsoever before receiving official information, or to venture any suggestion as to the possible consequences of Norway's action in returning the Flint to her American crew.

The City of Flint Affair Day by Day

OCTOBER 3—Sailed from New York with a cargo of tractors, grain, cereals, fruit, leather and wax for Manchester, Glasgow and other United Kingdom ports; cargo admittedly included contraband.

OCTOBER 9—Captured in Atlantic by German pocket battleship Deutschland, whose officers threatened to kill any of the City of Flint's crew of 41 and sink ship if they "tried anything." The Deutschland placed aboard the City of Flint a Nazi prize crew and 36 crewmen of the British steamer Stonegate, shelled and sunk four days previously by the Deutschland.

OCTOBER 21—City of Flint appeared in northern Norwegian port of Tromsoe, where British crew of Stonegate was released.

OCTOBER 23—Arrived in Soviet port of Murmansk on Kola Bay, in the Arctic, with Nazi flag flying. Russian authorities detained ship and interned prize crew.

OCTOBER 24—United States Government claimed Germans acted illegally in taking ship into Murmansk. United States Ambassador Laurence A. Steinhardt in Moscow unable to obtain any information regarding ship or crew.

OCTOBER 25—United States was informed that American crew was safe aboard vessel after release of interned German prize crew.

OCTOBER 27—Russian government announced that Germans had been permitted to take City of Flint from Murmansk after Soviet verification that the call there had been necessary to repair engine trouble.

OCTOBER 30—City of Flint put in temporarily at Tromsoe, then left in the direction of German port, staying in Norwegian territorial waters.

NOVEMBER 3—Appeared off Haugesund, on southwestern Norwegian coast; made contact with a German freighter; British warships sighted City of Flint, but made no attempts to molest her.

NOVEMBER 4—Norwegian admiralty announced internment of German prize crew for violation of Norwegian neutrality and released ship to American crew.

Gainard of the Flint regarding the controversial aspects involved in the seizure of the vessel by a German warship almost a month ago.

It was also expected that an inquiry would be made into the treatment accorded the 41 men aboard the Flint from the time of its capture to its release last night.

Soviet Protest Cited

In view of the State Department's officially expressed irritation over the action of Soviet authorities in assigning the Flint to the prize crew, which took the vessel 1,000 miles off its course to the Russian port of Murmansk, near the Bay of Kola, it was expected that particular attention would be paid to details of their treatment there.

Ambassador Laurence Steinhardt protested last Friday, after repeatedly unsuccessful attempts to get in touch with Gainard and his crew that Russian authorities were not according him the slightest degree of cooperation in establishing that the ship and its crew were safe.

The German prize crew, in taking the Flint to Murmansk, justified their entry on the grounds that the vessel's machinery was unseaworthy, but Vice Commissar of Foreign Affars Vladimir Potemkin told Steinhardt that he had not verified this point, assuming that port authorities had done so.

at the entrance to the Gulf of Finland.

With his country of 3,650,000 inhabitants entering the most fateful hours of its modern history, Erkko said the Finnish delegation had delivered Finland's definitive reply in Moscow this evening. Asked when the issue between Finland and Russia might be expected to attain decision, the foreign minister remarked:

"That depends solely on the Russian government. We have only to wait."

He said the time for another meeting between the Finnish delegates and the Soviet leaders in the Kremlin had not been arranged when tonight's hour-long session concluded to permit the Russian government to formulate its attitude on the Finnish note.

After disclosing that Finland had agreed to two-thirds of the Russian proposals—believed to consist of cession of the Hogland Islands and a small strip of territory north of Leningrad to the Soviets—Erkko added:

"Some of the Soviet proposals, however, have been found to be irreconcilable with Finland's neutrality . . .

"With respect to these Soviet wishes, which it was impossible to fulfill, Finland has had no alternative but to remain adamant."

The tone of tonight's discussions, Erkko said, had been diplomatically correct and corteous.

While the instructions given to the Finnish delegation of Dr. Paasikivi, and Finance Minister Tanner were understood to have permitted of discussion of details only, and not with Finland's formal reply, there was no indication that the delegation had asked for further instructions.

This was interpreted as a cheering sign, although Erkko said that at the moment he was unable to state whether negotiations would be broken off.

"If they continue," he said, "they could not last for a long time."

Inasmuch as the initiative is believed to rest now with the Soviet Union, this statement was taken as an indication that as far as Finland is concerned, the die has been cast.

$3,500,000 Port Planned For Alexandria

ant Secretary of War Johnson. "I hope to see ships plying the Potomac in ever increasing numbers."

Lauren Christie, Canadian Minister, saluted arrival of the Markland as a new link in commercial bonds between the United States and Canada. "This enterprise is particularly interesting," he pointed out, "because it joins two of the oldest settlements on the North American continent, Nova Scotia and Virginia."

Station WJSV recorded speeches by Moore, Christie, Eugene Meyer, publisher of The Post, and Col. C. H. L. Jones, president of the Mersey Paper Co. The speeches will be broadcast at 9:30 a. m. today.

Meyer described establishment of the newsprint shipping service as a modern fulfillment of Alexandria's ancient town seal—"a ship in full sail, with a balance equally poised above." He expressed hope that the Markland would never be obliged to fire the four-inch gun she carries for protection against U-boats and sea raiders.

Col. James contrasted the "perfect neighborliness" of American-Canadian relations, as typified by the gathering on the Markland bridge, with the "strife, suffering and desolation" prevailing in much of the world.

The Markland's maiden voyage to Alexandria "strengthens still further the old and friendly understanding between our nations," he said.

F. W. Robinson, president of the Fairfax County Chamber of Commerce, said that Northern Virginia counties were alert to the prospects opened up by arrival of the Markland and erection of the new warehouse. "We have every hope that Alexandria will soon be restored to its rightful place as an important port," he said.

Budwesky explained that plans for expansion of Alexandria harbor facilities did not conflict with Washington's waterfront development.

"Washington doesn't have the wharfage to accommodate the traffic that the Potomac can carry," he said. "The Alexandria development should be considered as part of a broader plan to give the entire Capital area adequate facilities for handling ocean-going commerce."

Construction of the elevated waterfront highway also would be a valuable contribution to recreational development of the Potomac Valley, Budwesky said.

The harbor plans will be placed before the White House and Virginia Congressional delegation early next year, he said.

Other guests included;

George K. Bender, John D. Matter, Charles Stump, Charles Burgess and Paul L. Delany, Alexandria city councilmen; John Tullock, manager of Alexandria Gazette; William Smith, Alexandria correspondent; Edwin Graham, and Wilmer Waller, of the Hamilton National Bank, Washington; W. Canada Names First Envoy To Australia

Charles Burchell to Be Inter-American High Commissioner

Charles Burchell, K. C., Halifax lawyer, has been appointed Canadian high commissioner to Australia, the first diplomatic representative Canada has sent to another British dominion, the Canadian Legation revealed here yesterday.

Burchell, now in Washington on a week-end visit, will return to Halifax Monday and plans to leave for Australia early in December. "It's a big assignment for an ordinary lawyer," he said yesterday.

The appointment followed Prime Minister Mackenzie King's announcement September 11 that high commissioners would be appointed to all the dominions in "an effort at more effective cooperation between the different parts of the British empire, all of which are more or less involved in this war."

Assignment of Canadian high commissioners to South Africa and New Zealand is expected soon, legation officials said yesterday.

Burchell, senior partner of the Halifax law firm of Burchell, Smith, Parker and Fogo, has had wide experience in inter-Dominion relations. He was chairman of the committee on merchant shipping legislation of the Conference on the Operation of Dominion Legislation and Merchant Shipping Legislation in London, 1929; a member of the Canadian delegation to the Conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations at Shanghai in 1931, and the British Commonwealth Relations Conferences at Toronto in 1933 and Sydney, Australia, in 1938. He is a specialist in marine and commercial law.

A native of Sidney, Nova Scotia, Burchell was educated at Dalhousie University, Halifax. He is 63.

Italy Expects Nazi Pressure To Join War

Seen as Balance to U. S. Action; Goering Visit Due Next Week

By James M. Minifie

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Rome, Nov. 3.—Fears that repeal of the American arms embargo might lead to German pressure on Italy to revise its nonintervention stand were expressed this evening by neutral observers when reports were circulated that Field Marshal Goering would come to Rome next week.

No confirmation could be obtained in official circles of the reports, which were first printed by Premier Mussolini's paper, Il Popolo d'Italia, under a London date line. But the fact that the item was picked up by the rest of the press with the additional detail that the field marshal's arrival was believed to be set for Tuesday was regarded as unofficial confirmation.

The press jumped the gun on repeal of the embargo by announcing it this morning, taking the rejection of the Shanley amendment for the final vote on the question. This was accompanied by reaction stories from Berlin, describing repeal as an act of intervention on behalf of France and England. All Berlin reaction was omitted from the afternoon press, which substituted stories of English and French satisfaciton.

Not Unwelcome

In private conversations Italians expressed neither surprise nor very much interest in the action of Congress. They gave the impression that it had been expected for some time and that, on the whole, the action was not unwelcome. Italy, as well as the United States, has moved a long way since last summer when the neutrality debate in Congress was re-echoed here at least in the press by vehement exhortations to America to retain the embargo.

The country has moved so far, in fact, that discreet reminders are being given in authoritative circles that Italy has not declared her neutrality but merely her non-belligerency. The reminders recall the terms of the decision of the council of ministers on September 1 that "Italy will not take any initiative in military operations."

Neutral observers recall that Fuehrer Adolf Hitler's published telegram on September 1 did not completely release Italy. It assured Italy that the Fuehrer believed he could carry on his undertaking alone.

These observers argue that circumstances have changed since that telegram was sent, that Germany may now need aid and that Goering is being dispatched to obtain it. Against this view, however, should be recalled the persistent and never denied report that the Italo-German pact contained a secret clause excluding Danzig as a causus foederi.

It is possible that Germany's attention is turning toward the Balkans. If such were the case, Italy's good will would be essential.

However, after the acquisition of Albania, Italy has repeatedly stressed the paramount importance of her own interests in the Balkans. It is worth noting in this connection that this particular moment has been chosen for publication of the letters exchanged five weeks ago between Italy and Greece, expressing hope that their plans for intimate and fruitful collaboration would soon be put into more concrete form. These letters were dated September 30.

The importance of this reaffirmation at such a moment is clear when it is considered that Greece and Turkey are in close relationship, that Greece, Turkey and Rumania all benefit from French guaranties and that Greece herself has her territorial integrity guaranteed by Italy.

Sweden Weighs Sharp Protest To Moscow

Stockholm, Nov. 3 (INS).—Suddenly catapulted to the forefront of Europe's war situation, Sweden tonight gravely weighed a sharp protest to Russia against accusations leveled by the Communist Party newspaper, Pravda.

It was expected Swedish Minister O. W. Munther in Moscow will shortly call upon Premier-Foreign Commissar Molotoff to present the protest and possibly warn Russia that such attacks, as that published in Pravda, aggravate the Baltic tension.

Resentment Runs High

Resentment ran high in Stockholm against the Pravda assertion that Swedish circles, obeying the dictates of the western powers, are egging Finland to make war with Russia.

At the foreign office a statement that had been attributed to Swedish Foreign Minister Sandler was termed a "pure invention." It was officially denied that Sandler had ever made the statement, namely, that acquisition by Russia of a naval base in southwestern Finland would be "fatal to Sweden."

'Useful' Police Rookie Has Red Hair and Wags a Mean Tail

Sergt. E. K. Shelton with Neptune, newest recruit of the Harbor Police

Chesapeake Bay Retriever Joined Force As Gift; Sergeant Says He Is Able 'To Pull Drowning Kids Out of Water'

The newest rookie in the Metropolitan Police Department is red haired, playful and—here's the strange thing—adores the sergeant who bosses him around.

"I think he'll be a big help," Sergt. E. K. Shelton said yesterday, as he and his protege stepped off a Harbor Precinct boat after a patrol cruise up and down the Potomac.

"When summer comes he can be especially useful to us. These fellows really know how to pull drowning kids out of the water, you know."

The rookie wagged his tail in appreciation of Sergt. Shelton's compliment and then bolted up the wharf to the precinct station, where Lieut William H. Carlin was waiting with a T-bone.

A Chesapeake Bay retriever, Reds joined the police force several weeks ago as a gift from a Harbor Precinct friend. He was officially christened Neptune—the badge around his neck reads "Neptune—Metropolitan Police"—but they call him Reds, for the color of his curly coat.

Among his tricks are grinning on command and greeting all policemen as they come on duty. He refuses to cross Maine avenue traffic unless he has a police escort and insists upon going along on every patrol cruise.

House Hoots Banquo's Ghost

Hoffman said.

"Why don't you hit me?" asked Dingell as they went through the door.

Thereafter the versions differ somewhat, except that both agree that Dingell was pushed into the door by Hoffman, after which the two members started swinging their fists.

Sabath, who was standing nearby, rushed between them.

Last night, just a few minutes before adjournment, Hoffman took the floor again to deny Hook's charge that he had changed the record, but the Michigan Democratic delegation appeared more eager to go home than to renew the squabble.

A lighter touch of irregularity was injected in the afternoon session by Representative Disney (Democrat), of Oklahoma, when he introduced the Tulsa University football team to the members. The gridiron team, which clashes with Catholic University today, was planted in the gallery, and Disney spoke from the floor.

"If you fellows want to see a good football game, stay here and see Tulsa play tomorrow," he said.

Mildly, the Speaker repremanded Disney as he pointed to the players and asked them to stand and meet the House.

With the stage all set for adjournment, Representative Knutson (Republican), of Minnesota, delayed matters a little by objecting to a unanimous consent request that further reading of the conference report on the neutrality bill be dispensed with.

He was left flabbergasted, however, when one of his own colleagues, Representative Powers (Republican), of New Jersey, eased up to the Speaker's desk and whispered the same unanimous consent request. Speaker Bankhead mumbled an inquiry as to objection and declared the request granted before Knutson realized what had happened.

Like schoolboys on the eve of vacation, the members shouted "vote" as Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, made a final speech against the arms embargo, and applauded loudly when Representative Johnson (Democrat), of Texas, said he had nothing to say after being given five minutes.

Warren Hatcher, who is frail and seventyish, put away the House mace again at the end of his eleventh session as mace bearer—without ever having used it.

The mace, a silver spread eagle and ball perched on a bundle of ebony-hued sticks, is the symbol of House authority. It is ordered used by the Speaker when there is extreme disorder in the House.

In such cases, the sergeant-at-arms for his deputy walks among the members bearing the mace high so that all may see. The members are then supposed to go back to their seats and restore quiet.

The crowd of spectators was smaller than during the neutrality debate, but many of those who have followed the show faithfully throughout were still in their seats as the Speaker's gavel came down at 6:35 p. m.

"I wonder what some of these women will do now?" mused a Capitol guard.

Plan Reported To Rid Reich Proper of Jews

Buffer State to Be Created; Thousands in Poland Declared Killed

By Beach Conger

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Berlin, Nov. 3.—Jews in the old German Reich will follow their brethren from Austria, Bohemia, Moravia and West Prussia into exile on the plains of eastern Poland, it was learned today. It is expected the entire process of forced migration will be completed within the year and will rid Germany proper of all Jews.

Reports coming into Berlin indicate the number of Jews killed in Poland in "revenge" for alleged atrocities committed on members of the German-speaking population is many times higher than any figures admitted or even hinted at by official sources. The latest unofficial estimates range from thousands to tens of thousands.

Destination Unknown

The mass uprooting of the Reich's Jews has so far been confined to territories outside the "alt Reich"—pre-Hitler Germany. Four transports already have left Vienna, Prague, Moravia-Ostrawa and Katowice for destinations unknown to the emigrants. There has been no official announcement of the giant project, but the Jews in Berlin are waiting in uncertainty and anxiety for news that they, too, must pack and go.

In Katowice, industrial town in Upper Silesia that became Polish after the World War, the entire male Jewish population is said to have been removed. Their families are expected to follow within six months.

Berlin Jews Suspect

The Jewish "reservation," as it is generally alluded to here, is supposed to comprise the area south of Lublin, between the Vistula and the San Rivers and the Rusian border. The area lies to the southeast of Warsaw and would form a sort of buffer area between Germany and Russia. All the "settlers" except doctors will have to engage in agricultural labor.

The Jews here know nothing about the migration plan, but the recent violent attack on them in the Nazi press has made them suspect that some new blow is ready for them. "Documentary evidence" that the Jews are responsible for the outbreak of the war has been featured in the newspapers here in the last few days.

Berlin Offers to Forfeit War Supplies for Bulgarian Amity

Russia and Germany Playing Strenuous, Inscrutable Diplomatic Game in the Balkans as Britain Encourages Italy

By Raymond Daniell

Copyright by New York Times.

London, Nov. 3.—Strenuous efforts are being made by Berlin to disrupt the possibility of forming a neutral bloc of Balkan states under the blessing of Rome and Ankara by buying off disgruntled Bulgaria, according to diplomatic advices received here today.

The efforts are strenuous because of the importance of the Balkan States to German sources of supplies, and remakable because of the Reich's offer reported today to part with precious war supplies like oil, rubber and cotton in exchange for Bulgarian products and her good will.

The coming weeks are expected to be crowded with important and more or less secret conversations in the little Balkan countries. An important part of the war behind the scenes is being waged in Bucharest, Belgrade, Budapest and last, but not least, Sofia.

There Russia and Germany are playing their own inscrutable game. Italy is playing hers, too, with the motive of forming a strong bloc of the little states across the Adriatic Sea to preserve neutrality and extend her sphere of economic and political influence.

British relations with Italy have improved so much that, it is believed, Britain looks with favor upon Italian aims in the Balkans and is encouraging Turkish cooperation.

This, it is understood, is causing considerable concern in Berlin. A Balkan bloc of neutrals strong enough to resist pressure from Berlin might threaten the existence of one of the most important leaks through the British blockade of Germany from the Black Sea via the Danube, which forms the boundary between Bulgaria and Rumania.

Of all the Balkan countries, it is conceded, Bulgaria is the most fertile soil for German propaganda now, for that little country has territorial claims against Yugoslavia, Rumania, Greece and Turkey.

Swiss in Sofia

Sofia, Nov. 3.—A Swiss economic mission arrived here today. Although Switzerland holds one-quarter of the total foreign capital investments in Bulgaria, commercial exchanges between the two countries are negligible.

The Soviet Minister to Bulgaria, Arkadi Lavrentieff, was received by Premier George Kiosseivanoff today. Later he saw the Russian, Rumanian and Italian Ministers and the Turkish Ambassador.

Russians May Organize

Bucharest, Rumania, Nov. 3.—The government has granted permission to the Russian minority to form its own minority organization within the framework of the National Rebirth Front.

Rome Has Cordial Shakeup

Rome, Nov. 3.—The "changing of the guards" took place officially at noon today. The seven outgoing ministers and four undersecretaries received their successors in their offices, and, with what the press terms "perfect Fascist style and comradely cordiality," turned over their offices to them.

At the Palazzo Littorio, headquarters of the Fascist Party, an elaborate ceremony was held for the changing of power from Lieut. Gen. Achille Starace to Fascist Party Secretary Ettore Muti.

British to Seize Nazi Exports, London Hears

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 3.—Reports were circulated in London today that the contraband control program might be extended to seizure of German exports as well as goods bound to that country. The ministry said a statement dealing with the question probably would be made next week.

Military chiefs disclosed that a main munitions and supply base had been established in France that they considered "safe" for the duration of hostilities and that an alternative base had been prepared to meet any contingency.

Dominion ministers working with British officials drafted economic warfare plans to direct the industrial and agricultural power of the dominions to supply troops at the front.

The scope of the campaign to keep supplies away from German troops was disclosed in an announcement that 500,000 tons of contraband had been seized in the sea blockade since war started.

Supply Minister Burgi said that in contrast to Britain's position when the World War started, she now had on hand supplies from a three-year rearmament program.

Military authorities also disclosed that bakeries are being established in France and arrangements made with French breweries to turn out the beer British Tommies like.

On the local front, government-approved price advances raised the cost of gasoline 3 cents a gallon and fixed the price of eggs at a maximum of 65 cents a dozen.

German Railway Loan Speedily Oversubscribed

Copyright by New York Times.

Berlin, Nov. 3.—It was officially announced today that the German railway loan of 500,000,000 marks, which in effect was Germany's first public war loan, was oversubscribed within a few hours.

This is hailed as a great success and a demonstration of the sound condition of German capital markets. These markets are indeed, supremely liquid because of the drastic curtailment of both consumption and production of consumption goods.

Wilson Memorial Pastor Finds Job Is No Snap, but He Loves It

The Rev. Mr. Bennett, Wilson Memorial Methodist pastor, about to step into his car, begins his daily rounds

Human Needs in Southeast Section Respect Neither Day Nor Night, Points Out Methodist Leader, One of Washington's Busiest

By Robert Tate Allan.

An urban clergyman's life is no snap, no mere Sunday preaching routine. It means hard work, with little leisure time, take it from the Rev. George H. Bennett, among Washington's busiest spiritual servants. But he loves his job.

For human needs, especially in the Southeast section, where his Wilson Memorial Methodist congregation worships, respect neither day nor night, he pointed out yesterday, explaining that his breakfast to bedtime schedule—with no two days ever alike—runs the whole gamut of human experience.

Baptisms, funerals, weddings, visitations to the sick, counsel to wayward youths—are all in a day's work for Mr. Bennett. He serves as chairman of both the juvenile delinquency and adjustment committee of the Southeast Neighborhood Council and the new Southeast Inter-Church organization.

While his congregation has some 300 members, it ministers to more than 500 families in the community. Mr. Bennett said it has been advisable to refer most social welfare cases to proper community agencies. The latter have given him splendid cooperation, he assured. There's been many a time when the pastor reached down in his own pocket to help a needy person.

On Monday mornings, when most folks have forgotten the previous day's sermon, Mr. Bennett begins planning the next Sunday's message. It gives him time to "mull it over" during the week. Shortly after breakfast, he drives off to denominational or interdenominational ministerial meetings. Lunch over, he's off to bring spiritual cheer to hospital patients. Church organization sessions generally fill Monday nights.

From Tuesday to Friday, sandwiched between his multitudinous demands, there is time to note the progress of two of his "pet" projects—the Boy Scout troop and the musical-dramatic organization.

Mr. Bennett praised the Buell Men's Bible Class for building a club room in the church basement for the scouts. He said he organized one of the first rural troops in America back in 1913, three years after the movement's start in this country, when he was serving as minister in Dublin, Harford County, Md. Oscar Oberg is scoutmaster.

Francis Chilton serves as president of the class, to whom Mr. Bennett, teacher, is now giving a series of lectures on the Bible's origin and Biblical personalities. Like sermon preparation, it requires research, with trips to Congressional and other libraries.

"If the church doesn't give children in this community an opportunity for cultural expression, they'll never get it," asserted the pastor, describing the fine work carried on in music and dramatics by Miss Viola Sanders, church deaconess. There are three choirs, with Miss Mabel Aaker as organist.

Saturday is generally a "clean-up day" and a period of quiet preparation for Sunday. Sermons must be finished, other service details arranged. "No work after Saturday dinner hour" is a house rule of the Bennetts, who have enjoyed only 12 social affairs in 20 years on Saturday nights.

Among the congregation's most unique group is the "Under-Forty Club" and the "Young Married Couples' Class," the latter recently organized, and taught by Mrs. M. J. Moran.

Designed to promote Christian social fellowship, the club is a community enterprise, drawing all denominations, with no dues. Its only conditions are that no man may sit with his wife or no girl with her beau, at the monthly dinner meetings. Everything is served on a cost basis. A turkey dinner is planned for November 15, according to Joseph Oberg, president.

Other busy units are the Sunday school, led by Richard Haynes; Ladies' Aid Society, of which Mrs. Walter White is president; Missionary Society, headed by Mrs. Kenneth Althouse; Epworth League, with Robert Kendrick as president, and the official board, of which Lester Engel is leader. The league issues a splendid church paper—"The Conqueror."

Mr. Bennett, who came to his present charge in June, 1933, will arise tomorrow at 6:30 a. m., and, after breakfast, teach the men's class at 9:30. Following the 11 a. m. sermon, he will probably hurry through his dinner in order to join with Mrs. Bennett in bringing the gospel to shut-ins. In the evening there will be the Epworth League, the evangelistic service and other duties.

Wilson Church is at 754 Eleventh street southeast.

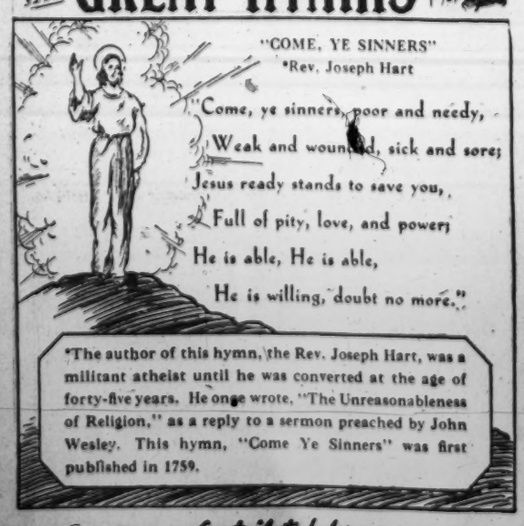
Little Stories about GREAT HYMNS


"COME, YE SINNERS"
Rev. Joseph Hart
"Come, ye sinners, poor and needy,
Weak and wounded, sick and sore;
Jesus ready stands to save you,
Full of pity, love, and power;
He is able, He is able,
He is willing, doubt no more."
The author of this hymn, the Rev. Joseph Hart, was a militant atheist until he was converted at the age of forty-five years. He once wrote, "The Unreasonableness of Religion," as a reply to a sermon preached by John Wesley. This hymn, "Come Ye Sinners" was first published in 1759.

Silver Fox Price Break Feared Because of War

Producers Demand Dumping Ban Against Canada, North Europe

The silver fox, long a source of worry to wealthy and not-so-wealthy husbands, recently has broadened its scope of annoyance and is worrying—for an entirely different reason—the Governors of several States, members of Congress, Cabinet officers and even President Roosevelt.

In this case, however, it is the producer of silver foxes, and not milady, the consumer, who has kicked up all the fuss.

The country's 15,000 silver fox farmers, who market annually 300,000 pelts, say they will be forced out of business unless prompt action is taken to prevent dumping of Canadian and European pelts here.

Would Double Supply

The war has closed or greatly restricted fur markets in England, France and central Europe. As a result, between 500,000 and 600,000 pelts may be unloaded in this country within the next few weeks.

Asked at his press conference yesterday whether the tariff might be increased to give procucers in this country greater protection, the President said it was not a tariff matter. It is logical, he said, that foreign pelts should seek the American market, where consumer purchasing power is comparatively high.

Interior Secretary Ickes meantime went to support of the domestic producers. He called the matter to attention of Oscar B. Ryder, chairman of the Committee for Reciprocity Information, set up by the President to deal with questions relating to reciprocal trade agreements.

Governors of certain producing States have written the President, pleading the case of the producers. A committee representing the latter now is in Washington and has been in session with the reciprocity committee. Members of Congress have been besieged with requests to do something.

Price Break Feared

If the foreign pelts are unloaded here, producers argue, the break in prices will be such as to bankrupt them. Last year they received an average of $35 for pelts and this is said to be only a few dollars above production cost.

The trouble is that, in the Canadian trade treaty, the tariff on pelts, fixed at 50 per cent ad valorem, was cut to 37½ per cent for Canada and all other exporting countries enjoying most favored nation treatment. Under the 1930 tariff act, the President could boost the tariff to 75 per cent, but now the Canadian treaty and this country's amicable relations with Canada stand in the way.

Under the circumstances, the outlook for producers, who are scattered throughout the northern tier of States, is gloomy. This country can consume 100,000 more pelts per year than the domestic production when business is good, but not the number which appears to be headed this way.

U.S. Jury Indicts Hutcheson and 3 Union Aides

True Bill Charges Restraint of Trade In Jurisdictional Row

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Nov. 3.—William L. Hutcheson, of Indianapolis, president of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, and three other union officers were indicted today by a Federal Grand Jury on a charge of conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce.

The grand jury based its indictment on a jurisdictional dispute between the carpenters' union and the machinists' union over installation of machinery at the brewing plant of Anheuser-Busch, Inc.

Those named with Hutcheson were George Casper Ottens, of Chicago, general representative of the carpenters' union; John A. Callahan, secretary of the carpenters' St. Louis district council until his suspension last August 15; and John August Klein, business representative of the district union.

Strike Called

After pointing out the interstate character of the Anheuser-Busch business, the indictment asserted the dispute between the two unions, both affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, had prevented construction of a proposed $500,000 storage building at the brewery.

On June 28, it declared, Klein, acting at Hutcheson's direction, called a strike of the carpenters, millwrights and cabinet makers at the brewery, and attempted to obtain a sympathy strike of other crafts employed there.

The offense charged is a misdemeanor, the maximum punishment on conviction being a year in jail and a $5,000 fine.

The indictment declared the moves were made not to obtain higher wages or shorter hours, but for the "unlawful and wrongful object and purpose of inducing and coercing an employer to violate a contract with one group of employes and to replace them with another group."

45 Indicted in Pittsburgh

Pittsburgh, Nov. 3 (AP).—A Federal grand jury, investigating building costs in Pittsburgh, indicted 13 corporations and 45 individuals today on charges of conspiracy to defraud the Federal Government.

Acting United States Attorney Mashank said the indictment charged "fraud on the Government that may total $500,000."

Among those named in the indictments were 12 electrical contracting firms, the Electrical Contractors Association of Pittsburgh and three leaders of the Pittsburgh local of the A. F. L.'s Brotherhood of International Electrical Workers.

The indictment charged the defendants conspired to "secure in advance the awarding of contracts" to a contractor selected by the contractors association "all to the mutual profit of the defendants, the injury and damage of the United States, the selfish destruction of the public interest and the impairment of Governmental functions."

Financed by PWA

The Hale Electric Co., named in the indictment, recently was awarded the electrical contract for the city's new Municipal Hospital, which was partly financed with Public Works Administration funds.

The indictment charged the union officials had agreed to "police" the industry and make certain that collusive bidding agreements were carried out on 84 PWA-financed projects in Allegheny County.

The jury declared that contractors met and agreed upon the contractor who was to submit the low bid and that other bids were then revised upward.

U. S. Hunts 70 In $20,000,000 Lottery Fraud

Army Reserve Colonel One of First Seized; Will Rogers' Name Used

Boston, Nov. 3 (AP).—Arrests mounted tonight as Federal agents from Maine to Minnesota pressed a roundup of more than seventy persons indicted on charges of conducting a fraudulent lottery which swindled patrons of more than $20,000,000 in 10 years.

The indictments were returned in September, but Government officers waited until they believed a clean sweep could be made before naming the defendants.

At head of the list, as the "big shot," they placed Abraham F. Zimmerman, of Chicago, in which city, they said, national headquarters of the lottery syndicate was located.

The syndicate, the indictments charged, maintained elaborate lithographing and printing plants and turned out 12,000,000 of the tickets on various devices of chance annually, but paid out only a small part of promised prizes.

Army Colonel Held

One of the early arrests was that, at Silver Creek, Mich., of Dr. Frank Deacon, World War surgeon and colonel in the Army Medical Corps Reserve.

Dr. Deacon, formerly of Chicago but latterly physician at Michigan CCC camps, denied knowledge of a lottery and said he had leased his 200-bed hospital in Chicago supposedly for legitmate purposes. He waived examination and was held in $5,000 pending an order for removal to Boston.

The first arraignment in the Boston district brought a guilty plea from Roland Blair, of Quincy, and he was held in $1,000 bail for sentence.

Charges contained in three indictments included use and conspiracy to use the mails in a scheme to defraud, interstate transportation of lottery tickets and conspiracy to promote an illegal lottery.

Will Rogers' Name Used

One of the illegal lotteries allegedly conducted by the "Gold Bond" syndicate purported to benefit the Will Rogers memorial fund. The cowboy humorist's name was used without permission, investigators charged, and his widow and Owen D. Young, industrialist, were among those called before the grand jury to testify regarding this phase of the alleged swindle.

Three women were among the accused, Mrs. Gertrude Becker, of Chicago, Zimmerman's confidential secretary; Mrs. Elizabeth Rice, nurse at the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital, and Frances Schedrow, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Zimmerman earlier this year appealed a conviction for evasion of income taxes on an income the Government contended was $400,000 in a year.

Russell F. Emerich, of Casey, Ill., former University of Chicago football player, was indicted as manager of the Twentieth Century Sales Co., alleged distribution agency for the syndicate.

Roosevelt Asked To Thanksgiving Party on Nov. 30

Plymouth, Mass., Nov. 3 (AP).—Without even blushing, this town, birthplace of Thanksgiving, tonight invited President and Mrs. Roosevelt to help it observe the holiday—on November 30.

Hugh R. Maraghy, head of the Junior Chamber of Commerce and chairman of the "National Thanksgiving Observance Committee," sent the invitation to the Chief Executive, "well aware," he said, that the President had called for observance of Thanksgiving a week earlier than usual—on November 23.

"We do feel," wrote Maraghy, "that it would be not inconsistent with your stand if you could possibly arrange to be with us at our observance."

Bankhead Congratulates Martin on Birthday

Speaker Bankhead yesterday congratulated Minority Leader Martin, of Massachusetts, on his fifty-fifth birthday, and, amid laughter, announced that if "it were not out of order, I'd call a recess in his honor."

This was an allusion to the Republican leader's satement that he would oppose an adjournment of Congress after final action on the neutrality legislation. Bankhead praised Martin's leadership, and Martin responded that the Speaker was "one of the fairest who ever occupied the chair."

Pine Revamps Staff to Speed D. C. Litigation

Civil and Criminal Divisions Set Up With Plan for Coordinator

Reorganization of his staff to expedite legal business was announced yesterday by District Attorney Pine. The changes will be effective Monday.

The reorganization established a civil and a criminal division of the staff, each in charge of an administrative assistant. Pine created the post of senior trial attorney, whose duty it will be to coordinate courtroom work.

The change gives official form to a classification of duties which Pine has been testing informally for some time.

Pine announced resignation of Harry L. Underwood as an assistant district attorney, effective Sunday. Underwood will become a senior attorney in the Bureau of Inquiry of the Interstate Commerce Commission, a post he held before joining the prosecutor's staff, February 1, 1934.

The criminal division of the district attorney's office will be in charge of Assistant District Attorney Wilson, who was designated administrative assistant by Pine. Wilson will have general supervision over criminal matters, including grand jury presentation, Police Court proceedings and trials in the District Court.

Administrative assistant in charge of the civil division will be Assistant District Attorney Fihelly. Besides supervision of civil matters in the District Court, he will be in charge of defending Government interests in the Municipal Court.

Wilson and Fihelly will collaborate with each other on the more important cases.

Assistant District Attorney McNeil was assigned as senior trial attorney.

Pine said a successor to Underwood had been recommended to the Department of Justice. When appointed, he said, the new assistant will be assigned to civil work.

Smuggler Loses Deportation Plea

Unmoved by the plea of Helmuth Schoenfeld, 30, that he feared Nazi persecution, Justice Gordon refused in the District Court yesterday to help Schoenfeld escape deportation to Germany when he finishes his jail term for smuggling.

Schoenfeld admitted smuggling China figurines into this country when he came back from a visit to Germany last spring.

Attorney Myer Koonin said Schoenfeld feared he might be put in a concentration camp for remarks he made about the Nazi government when he was on trial.

Bridges, Weary Of 'Caginess,' Hurls Hat in Ring

Indianapolis, Nov. 3 (AP).—Senator H. Styles Bridges, of New Hampshire, told newsmen here today he would be "available" for the Republican Presidential nomination next year.

Saying he was "sick of this caginess" about candidacies, he declared "I will be available for the Republican Presidential nomination through the medium of unpledged delegates to the next convention."

"Of course, I expect to have some of my friends on those delegations," Bridges continued. "I have been assured of enough delegates now to have a substantial following at the convention."

Later, addressing the Indianapolis Association of Credit Men, he asserted that the national debt, which he placed at $46,000,000,000, was planned by the New Deal "to wrap the people for purposes of control in the tentacles of a bureaucracy."

Germans Deny Berlin Orders to Leave Turkey

Copyright by New York Times.

Istanbul, Turkey, Nov. 3.—Germans here deny they have been ordered to leave Turkey. One leading German said: "We would hardly abandon all the German economic interests in Turkey."

The German community in Turkey at the outbreak of the war numbered 3,000. Now there are about 2,400. Some left because of the loss of work as Turkish-German trade declined; some volunteered for military service, some women and children returned home. The government is not renewing contracts for many German technical experts.

The report that German authorities had ordered Germans to leave Turkey was officially denied in Berlin today.

U.S. Agency to Rule Munitions Trade

that additional orders totaling more than $100,000,000 are ready to be let immediately, and estimated that soon follow. Missions from seven belligerent and neutral nations are either here or en route, it was said, including one from Finland. The Finns expect to place an order for more than a half billion more would about 200 warplanes here.

Orders for from 2,500 to 3,000 were reported to have been received yesterday by New York offices of six aviation companies. The contracts were estimated to call for expenditure of about $175,000,000.

Any fear that the foreign orders will interfere with our national defense program, was discounted by Assistant Secretary Johnson, who said the control exercised by the new interdepartmental committee, prevented such an event. This control, officials made plain, has no legal basis, but results from the willingness of industry and the foreign buyers to cooperate with the Government.

Johnson yesterday turned over to President Roosevelt a substantially completed report from the War Resources Board, which included the body's recommendations for mobilizing industry in the event of war.

Meanwhile, Secretary of War Woodring was revealed to have told a group of Congressional leaders that national defense hereafter should be determined by needs rather than on "a basis of dollars and cents."

In calling both Democratic and Republican leaders of the House Military Affairs and Appropriations committees to the War Department Thursday, Woodring was initiating a practice of having Congressional defense chiefs downtown for monthly conferences with War Department chiefs on expansion plans.

Establishment of the interdepartmental arms control committee, officials said, was decided on last spring after the Senate investigation of visit of a French air mission here. The incident emphasized the need of a central agency to keep tab on foreign arms buying, it was declared.

Arms Plants Surveyed

The committee has made a survey of American arms plants and their production capacity. When foreign buyers arrive here they are told to contact the group and explain their needs. If two factories are capable of producing the type of plane or other armament they wish, and the Army expects to place an order with one of them, the foreign nation is directed to the other.

This procedure prevents the overexpansion of one factory and builds up another. In the same way, weak spots in the American munitions industry can be strengthened, it was pointed out. There are virtually no plants here making field guns, but several firms building peacetime products can readily be adapted to turning out guns. The Army's principal objective in setting up the groups, it was said, is expansion of the Nation's capacity for munitions production.

According to Army officials, France is placing orders for 2,600 airplanes and motors with the Pratt & Whitney division of United Aircraft Corporation and 2,000 others with Wright Aeronautical Corporation. These contracts should total more than $60,000,000. The French air mission is also negotiating for 100 bombers from the Douglas Aircraft Corporation, it was said.

A British mission now in Montreal is expected to move to New York to facilitate the purchase of 1,600 training planes from North American Aviation. They would be used to train pilots in Canada, it is understood.

An official survey shows the following planes on order for belligerents which may be exported with repeal of the arms embargo: To Great Britain, 76 of an original order of 400 planes placed with North American Aviation, and 90 out of a 250 Lockheed order; to Australia, 35 of a 100-plane contract with Lockheed; to France, 100 Lockheed planes, 215 Glenn L. Martin craft and 20 from Vaught-Sikorsky Aircraft Corporation.

Canda to Buy 1,500

Copyright by New York Times.

Ottawa, Nov. 3.—Canada will become a purchaser of war essentials in the United States as soon as the neutrality amendment has been put through its last stages.

Her first order will be for 1,500 airplanes to start her gigantic scheme to train 25,000 British empire airmen here every year. She has no facilities for making airplane engines and her aircraft plants are busy making fusilages.

The planes will be ordered direct by the Caandian war supply board. Canada will pay for them and will be reimbused in due course by Great Britain, Australia and New Zealand.

Since the planes are to be used for advanced training they must be of the bombing, fighting and reconnaissance types already in use.

If the war is to be a long one, Canada will expand her aircraft industry. If Germany bombs Britain in earnest part of Britain's aircraft plant may be transplanted to Canada.

Port Of Alexandria

Belhaven, now Alexandria, grew up around a warehouse and in Colonial days was one of the most important of American seaports. For generations tobacco and grain were shipped thence and imports of many kinds were brought in from overseas. The story is told of a warning George Washington is reputed to have given the residents of that town. If it should become indifferent to the advantages of commerce, he is quoted as having said, Alexandria will eventually be surpassed in importance by the port of New York.

It is a long time since Washington's prediction was fulfilled. But with the arrival in Alexandria of the Canadian steamer Markland a new era may be said to have begun. This 6,000-ton freighter will now make Alexandria instead of Baltimore a regular port of call. And in this there is poetic justice, for it was the rise of the Baltimore clippers, in the halcyon days of sail, which had as much responsibility as anything for the decay of Alexandria's wharfs.

"I hope the history of Alexandria as a center of deep-water activity will repeat itself," said Mayor Richard Ruffner, in welcoming the Markland. Washington, which long depended on Alexandria as a port, will echo the wish. And if fulfilled, even in modest fashion, waterfront bustle will add to the charm of the old-world city across the Potomac.

Williamsburg, another famous Virginia Colonial town, has been restored as a museum piece. In the case of Alexandria there would be more appeal, and much more vitality, in a renaissance based upon the same factor of ocean shipping which was responsible for much of the grandeur of the past.

A Startling Precedent

By a unanimous decision the National Labor Relations Board has ordered the Western Union Telegraph Co. to withdraw all recognition from an association of its employes which is held to be under company domination.

In view of the unanimity of the findings, the evidence, presumably, strongly supports the contention that the union is not a bona-fide, representative bargaining organization of the kind contemplated by the Wagner act. If that be true, no exception can be taken to the order to dissolve it. A very grave doubt arises, however, as to the wisdom of the order requiring the company to reimburse employes for all union dues deducted from their wages since 1935, when the Wagner act was passed.

This method of collecting membership dues, familiarly known as the check-off, is unquestionably an undesirable means of financing trade unions. But it is one that labor leaders, notably John L. Lewis, have insisted upon and frequently fought to obtain in union contracts. The check-off system of the United Mine Workers has been of inestimable benefit to Mr. Lewis, enabling him to fill union coffers when other organizations were unable to collect from their members because of hard times, indifference or other causes.

It is not the check-off itself, however, that is under fire in the present instance. A refund of dues was ordered on the ground that the union was not representative, and the company therefore had no right to act as a collector for it. Compliance with the order, the validity of which is to be tested in the courts, would, it is stated, entail payment of a half million dollars to Western Union employes.

This seems to be a very drastic penalty to inflict, considering the circumstances. Viewed as a precedent, such an order has some very alarming possibilities. Suppose, for instance, that a C. I. O. or an A. F. of L. union instead of a company union had asserted its right to represent the employes of the Western Union. Suppose, further, that it had been receiving dues through an agreement with the company to deduct them from wages. If the NLRB decided that the union thus recognized was not representative, would the company be liable to return all the funds collected?

Under the Western Union ruling presumably that would be the case. It would be interesting to know what would be organized labor's reaction to a restitution order of that character.

Dividing Fiscal Powers

Inclusion of the taxing power in the general authority that would be granted to the District Government by Corporation Counsel Seal's reorganization bill should occasion no surprise. It is difficult to understand why he did not also include the municipal spending power.

Copies of Mr. Seal's bill, now under discussion by the District Commissioners' reorganization committee, are not yet available. It is understood, however, that he would grant the Commissioners the same taxing powers that were exercised by the so-called territorial government here from 1871 to 1874. Washington then was a small city with unpaved streets. Yet Congress granted to a hodge-podge semi-local government virtually complete taxing and spending powers for municipal purposes.

Now Washington is a large metropolis entirely capable of managing its own local affairs. By all means a reorganized city government should have the taxing power. Either the present Commissioners or a new city council would be more competent to exercise that authority than is Congress. It is far fetched to suppose that a competent local government would abuse the taxing power. In imposing new levies or adjusting rates it would undoubtedly be more responsive to the popular will than is the action of 531 national legislators elected from every part of the United States except the District.

But the taxing and spending powers go hand in hand. If the local government is to be responsible for raising money to cover its operating costs, why should it not also determine what those costs are to be? At present Congress keeps expenditures in check because it realizes the difficulty of raising local revenue. If the spending of District funds should remain under control of Congress, and taxing should become a local function, there would be a great temptation for that body to order elaborate improvements to adorn the Capital City. And the Federal payment to the District would probably be cut as soon as the financing problems were dumped into the lap of the Commissioners.

The present Washington government is so weak that any addition to its powers may seem to be a net gain. Yet it is doubtful whether the proposed division of fiscal responsibility would work to the advantage of the community. Logic alone should impel the reorganization committee to write a grant of spending powers into the bill along with the revenue provision.

Indeed, the bill will be wholly inadequate if it fails to include a general grant of municipal powers to the District. The deficiency of the present local government cannot be overcome merely by giving it a few additional duties. What is needed is a charter authorizing a local governing body to perform all ordinary municipal functions. Perhaps the "general welfare" clause of the Seal bill is broad enough for this purpose. But his exclusion of the spending power will justify a close check to make certain that the bill permits the development of a genuine local government.

Milk For The Needy

Among other provisions of a proposed new marketing agreement to regulate the handling of milk in Washington is a recommendation that producers be paid less for fluid milk intended for the use of low-income families and persons on relief. The resultant increased demands for fluid milk to be marketed at prices below present retail levels would, it is said, bring larger returns to milk producers in addition to benefiting low-income groups.

This plan of charging different groups of consumers varying prices for the same quality of milk has been tried before without impressive results. Consumers often suspect that the price concessions are not made in good faith. In other words, they doubt whether the lower-priced product is just as good as the higher-priced. Furthermore, it is difficult to draw the line between the economically underprivileged entitled to concessions and those who should pay the going price.

The most efficacious way to encourage increased consumption of milk in the District would be to reduce retail prices for all consumers. In view of the large profits enjoyed by the chief local distributor of fluid milk and cream in the Washington area, it seems more than probable that substantial cuts in the prevailing high level of retail prices could be made without forcing reductions in the prices paid to milk producers. The larger sales resulting from a generally lower price scale would probably offset to some extent reductions in the profit on each unit sold.

From the viewpoint of the local community, a general reduction in milk prices, encouraging greater per capita consumption for all classes, would be a much greater boon than a sharp reduction of limited applicability. At present high-price levels many families in fairly comfortable circumstances are inadequately supplied with milk.

For families on relief or in need of some assistance milk and other necessaries should be provided at public expense through regular distributive channels. In that way alone can adequate provisioning be assured. As experience has shown, this type of relief is infinitely preferable to a multi-price system in which charges are adjusted with reference to the buyers' capacity to pay.

Test Of Statesmanship

While the House did not attain the same degree of non-partisanship in consideration of the neutrality bill as did the Senate, the debate reveals a salutary subordination of party advantage to the national welfare. Representative Wadsworth (Republican), of New York, made a particularly good impression with his plea for enactment of the Administration bill. He is entitled to a large share of the credit for keeping partisanship in check and preventing Republicans in the House from lining up almost solidly for retention of the arms embargo.

Only 21 Republicans voted with 220 Democrats for repeal of the embargo. Only 36 Democrats lined up with 143 Republicans against it. More general disregard of party lines would have been desirable. Nevertheless, the temperate character of much of the debate gives rise to hope that the United States' foreign policy will not be made a political football in the 1940 contest for control of the Government.

Mr. Wadsworth is not enthusiastic over the Administration's neutrality bill. Yet he believes that it approaches a difficult problem realistically, and that if any legislation can keep us out of war the restraints imposed upon American shipping and travelers by this measure will serve that purpose. His opposition to the arms embargo is based upon actual experience under that law to date and upon the indisputable fact that Congress cannot write an act of this character with any assurance that it will be properly applicable to unpredictable events in the future.

It is encouraging to find evidence of statesmanship in the House as well as in the Senate. Congress may be called upon to make numerous grave decisions during the months ahead. The need for men who will place principle and the national welfare ahead of any partisan or personal considerations will be great. It is not improbable that future leaders of both major parties will emerge from this severe test of men and policies.

Communist Character

Since it was reported that Mr. William C. McCuistion is wanted by the police of New Orleans in connection with a murder case, the Communists have worked themselves into a great storm of moral indignation over the character of the witnesses from whom the Dies Committee has been collecting some of its information.

This indignation seems somewhat illogical in view of the fact that the most damaging evidence has come from witnesses who were formerly Communist Party members in good standing. It must at least be admitted the Communist leaders were no more squeamish about the character of their associates than is Mr. Dies about the moral standing of his witnesses.

Also, in their attempted disparagement of these witnesses the Communists are unconsciously disparaging the importance of their own movement. For although the Dies Committee revelations have shown Communist activities in the United States, and especially in some labor unions, to be fairly extensive, they have also shown the genus Communist to be much less formidable than many had feared.

The conception of a Communist prevailing until recently was that of a single-minded zealot, identified mind and soul with the cause of the social revolution, unscrupulous as to means but at least invincibly loyal to his ends.

Such a description no doubt fitted, and still fits, many members of the party. But it is not to such men and women that practical application of the party policies can be entrusted. The means by which the Communists have pursued their objectives are now known to be shady, to say the least. And it is impossible to demand of the conscious instrument of an amoral policy that he be any better than the work he is required to do.

Perhaps the public confessions of many ex-Communists are actuated more by expediency than by any sudden repentance for past sins. But if that is the case they are merely following the cynical example consistently set before them by the bosses in Moscow.

A rooster put to the ax in Nebraska was found to have eaten 59 parts of an alarm clock. Not many would go to such great length to get rid of a competitor.

Precedent For Despotism

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Unfortunately, Finland is not the first to be confronted with a situation now before us, since all organizations—political, religious or commercial—have believed in putting down the smaller ones as stepping stones for their own rise to greater power. The wrong idea of policy, however, did not originate in Germany or in Russia, it was manifested strongly, at first, in the field of religion, in which, every time a soul felt the urge of laboring independent of a church organization (be it Jewish or Christian, Greek or Roman), the policy of "despotism," now called dictatorship, came into play.

And so, man's idea of right or wrong first formed in his concept of religion, was later carried into the field of politics. The American patriots inserted that First Amendment (but with a rather negative wording) to lessen the evil of self-expanding church organizations. The way, therefore, to render dictatorship useless is for all democracies to take a more serious view of the purport of that amendment and see that the American saying, "a soul is greater than a state," becomes a living fact as well as a theory of right.

"Great I Am" Group

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I was very much surprised to read the unjust criticism, concerning the "I Am" group, in your paper of October 25.

It seems almost impossible to believe that any person could condemn a thing that he knows nothing about, which his article proved. Mr. Pegler would do well to at least investigate a thing before he makes such false statements about a group of people who stand for the highest principles of life.

Death On Route 50

To the Editor of The Post.—Sir:

Just a few lines in your paper about the accident of October 29, on route No. 50 between Winchester and the Shenandoah River which might have been prevented if our highway commission had fixed this route between these two points—widening the bridges and road where it is needed, and taking out some of the curves. But no, they want to spend the taxpayers' money to build a new road about one mile from the present route No. 50 and leave the old road for our Clarke County citizens to travel.

If one should desire, he could drive over route No. 50 from the Shenandoah River to Winchester, then drive over route No. 12 from White Post through Boyce to Old Chapel and see for himself the death traps. Who knows, the next might be your son or my son, your wife or my wife, or ourselves.

Let's get back to route No. 50. Will we Clarke County citizens have to boycott Winchester or run the risk of losing our lives? Why not stop building the Waterloo route and fix routes 50 and 12 before someone else gets killed? Then if we need a new road, build it.

I am sure we could reduce gas tax if we did not waste so much money foolishly by building roads where they are not needed. After all, why not build roads where the community wants them? Has not this community any say at all as to where we should build the roads, or is this like Germany where one man rules?

Let us have our highway commissioners elected by the people instead of appointed like so many offices in Virginia in which so many take advantage of their appointment and do not give the citizens what they want.

Ninety-nine per cent of the citizens want route No. 50 fixed and kept where it is.

On Inter-American Cooperation

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It is with great interest that I learned of the forthcoming conference on Inter-American Relations in the Field of Education. It is an excellent step in the right direction for the new Division of Cultural Relations of the Department of State to bring together distinguished leaders in the field of education for the purpose of working out a broad program dealing with the development of more effective relations with the other American republics.

The work of Secretary of State Cordell Hull and Dr. Ben M. Cherrington, Chief, Division of Cultural Relations, in thus supplementing the "Good Neighbor Policy" is of the utmost significance if peace and good will is to be fostered in this hemisphere.

Inter-American friendship is a vitally important matter especially in these times of world unrest. Therefore the results of this conference must be the beginning of the factors that shall determine the degree to which it will be possible for the Americas to become a happy family of nations.

But beyond this conference and all conferences lies the problem of the education of human beings. In this respect the work of Dr. Frederick Keitner, founder-president of the Inter-American Friendship Center of Buenos Aires and New York is noteworthy at this time. Attending the Peace Conference at Buenos Aires of 1936 as an observer, he remained to create a center for the purpose of bringing about closer cultural ties and better understanding between the peoples of North and South America.

The keen interest of the members of this Instituto Biosofico Argentino, and their desire for mutual cooperation, understanding, and friendship with their fellow members of the Inter-American Friendship Center in New York, is proof that the people of the Americas can learn to value the rich cultural treasures which abound in their respective nations.

The creation of Inter-American Friendship Centers in every large city in the United States as well as in the cities of South America will go far toward uniting the Americas in mutual cooperation, and the preservation and advance of the ideals of democracy.

No doubt many will look to this conference with great interest. I am convinced that in time to come the scope of this work shall grow in magnitude so as to necessitate the establishment of a separate department devoted to peace and cultural relations, and headed by a secretary of peace in the President's Cabinet.

Repeal Of The Poll Tax

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I disagree with Mr. Frank G. Campbell's letter in opposition to repeal of the poll tax in Virginia.

West Virginia, a border State, has no poll tax; more citizens vote, the politicians are of a better quality and the State itself is far ahead of Virginia in many respects.

Few persons, aside from college students, public servants or labor leaders engaged in social research, realize the deplorable conditions existing in Virginia. Since urban conditions are similar to like conditions in other States, we would like to point out certain rural problems that have not yet been solved.

One hundred thousand families, about half of the white rural population, and 65,000 Negro families, or approximately three-fourths of the rural Negro population, must be classed as marginal from the standpoints of income, property holdings, living standards and educational levels. The income of the marginal families averages less than $600 a year, including home-produced supplies, exclusive of rent. One hundred thousand farm residences were worth less than $500 in 1930, and 100,000 white marginal families have a third more children than a parallel number of families of higher standards.

Almost half of Virginia's farms were under 50 acres in size in 1935, and over one-fourth under 20 acres, with even less acres under cultivation. Many farms are becoming too small to maintain a decent standard of living without supplementary nonfarm work, but supplementary work is not always available when needed, especially in nonindustrial areas.

Doctors, public welfare workers and home agents have testified that a high percentage of marginal families within the State have inadequate nutrition, especially in childhood. This may be partly explained by the fact Virginia per capita retail sales were only $176 in 1935 as compared to $257 for the Nation as a whole, the State ranking thirty-seventh in this respect. Virginia, a place of great natural beauty and strange contradictions of poverty and wealth side by side, also ranks from thirtieth to fortieth in over 30 other important counts.

In spite of a serious situation the people of Virginia seem unconcerned about the discontent and sordid poverty that is part and parcel of an obsolete social system throttling the Old Dominion.

Neutral In Thought

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I don't think we have to worry much about what is going on over there, if he would just leave us alone. The President has gotten everything else he has struggled for, perhaps, he will get this too. It doesn't matter now whether he said our frontier lies on the Rhine; it is the steady, steady pressure toward putting us there.

Who ordered the Bremen held for two days? Who asked at first for repeal of the whole neutrality act?

The United States protests to Germany against the bombing of civilians. The President announces submarines now off the Florida coast, now off Alaska. He offers to police the Western Hemisphere. No submarine can land here! (But battleships can.) We are kept in a state of indigation and alarm.

That is the way—until we begin to feel insecure and harassed, as if the enemy had been worrying us for a long time. Until there is need for us to act upon our accumulated fears, and cast our might against the enemy with which we are obsessed.

He didn't ask us to be neutral in thought, but we need to be neutral in thought. And we need a leader who will help us to be so.

Prelude To War

Scudding clouds partially hid the moon, and Hongkong waited tensely, for the night was favorable for an air raid.

Street lights were already out. A few cars groped their way along Des Voeux road. Their headlights, dimmed with cloth hoods—purple, red, green, or black, added a weird touch to the darkness of the night. It reminded one of pumpkinhead lanterns on Halloween, only this was deadly serious.

Another figure joined me in the dark shadows by the bus stop; and the newcomer looked at his watch. The same thought must be running through his mind as through mine. The zero hour was drawing near.

"A half hour before the complete blackout," I said lightly, to dispel the strange feeling that seemed to affect both of us. He laughed nervously and made some remark about the futility of air raid precautions.

Presently the bus pulled up to the stop, and we climbed in its half-lighted interior.

Where Des Voeux road leaves the business section and plunges into the Chinese quarter of Wanchai, the bus turned up for its climb to the higher levels that make up Hongkong, the city built steeply atilt on the side of an island. Normally the night view on Hongkong with its lights strung all the way up to the "Peak" makes it one of the most beautiful of ports to view from the harbor.

Mr. Hsu was waiting in the blackness of an alley corner when I dropped down from the bus, and together we made our way to the address that had been given us. Neither of us knew the student leader, Liu, who was to guide the party through the lines.

On the third floor of an apartment house on Caine road, we entered a small room. The place was in disorder and strewn with supplies for the trip.

Two European suits hung on hangers from the low wall molding. Two beds, still unmade, a bare desk, a dresser, and two or three battered wicker chairs, gave the place the appearance of a students' dormitory room in a Chinese school. There were no rugs, curtains, pillows or other conveniences.

Introductions were brief, and attention immediately turned to the matter in hand. The conversation was low, intense, and in Cantonese. I could understand only a few words . . . "three days" . . . "seventy miles" . . . "soldiers" . . . "flying machines"

Suddenly, at 9, the small conference was interrupted by the first air raid signal. All lights were extinguished and a few nervous cries and laughter came from other parts of the building. While the sirens wailed eerily from a distant spot on the outskirts of the island, Liu fumbled for a candle.

We leaned back in our chairs and waited until he placed it, lighted, on the floor between us. Over the flickering light, the discussions of plans continued. An hour later all details had been cleared up. The guerrillas would meet us to provide safe convoy where enemy lines were thin.

Outside, Mr. Hsu and I parted company with a few final reassurances and I started down the steps of one of the side streets leading to the waterfront.

The narrow streets were filled with darkness; only here and there a faint light found its way through a heavily shuttered window in an upper story. From one of these came the high-pitched squeak of a Chinese fiddle; farther on, the muffled notes of a piano carried the tune of a swing song.

A few people were crouched in their doorways to enjoy the coolness of the open street; but their subdued voices were quickly lost in the utter dark of the night.

Once a policeman passed, alert to any disregard of regulations; then his form was swallowed up in the blackness.

These sights and sounds were hardly reassuring. Hiding in the dark, hardly daring to breathe, the city seemed uneasy as though the wings of enemy planes had already cast a dark shadow of death over the island.

At the ferry dock there were more signs of life where figures shuffled about dimly under hooded overhead lights. Traffic in the harbor continued slowly, as boats moved over the water with only navigation lights burning. The dark outline of Kowloon, on the other side, appeared lonesome and unfamiliar.

Later from my room window in Kowloon, I looked back across the harbor for the lights of Hongkong. Not one showed. Only the dark side of the island could be seen, and the place seemed a dead city in the night.

Perhaps when the air raid test was over and the lights came on, the anxiety that seemed to hang over the city would pass off. But why was the suspense prolonged? Notices had stated that the test was to last only an hour. Had vague apprehension turned to genuine alarm?

Even as I watched, the far-off air-raid sirens started up. At the first weird sound, the string of highway lights flashed on as though with relief. Here and there house lights blinked. In a few moments the city had come back to life, with all its lights gayly twinkling their zig-zag way up to the Peak.

Surely, I thought to myself, as I went to bed, that sensed feeling of dread had been real. Underneath the surface of routine air raid practice, Hongkong was afraid, gripped by a psychological fear of possible things to come. Reservists and volunteers were being called up daily, and still there were persistent rumors that "Hongkong will not be defended." At last I fell asleep with troubled thoughts of the coming trip into the interior.

"Air Raid Test Satisfactory," the newspaper read the next morning.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

The C. I. O. Backstep

THESE APES out in Los Angeles certainly have made an awful bum out of poor old John Longwords Lewis with their indorsement of the ham-and-eggs thing. There is just no getting around the fact that the California C. I. O., under Communist domination, has placed itself on record in support of a constitutional amendment which revokes labor's right to strike.

Lewis may deny that the Communists run the C. I. O. on this coast, but it makes no difference what he says, because everybody knows they do. Moreover, any sane American labor man will admit that this antistrike clause of the ham-and-eggs article moves to abolish the dearest treasure that organized labor has acquired in the long struggle up to the Wagner act. John Lewis didn't win it, nor was it a trophy brought in by the communistic California C. I. O. It was won by leaders and fighters long before their time and was handed on to them for safekeeping, although it might be admitted that Lewis himself has done some effective brawling in his day to confirm in practice a right previously established in law and principle.

One Way To Remove Curse Of Indorsement

MAYBE LEWIS will find it more convenient to admit that the bolos have obtained absolute control of the California C. I. O. and thus, to some extent, remove the curse from this action. Having done that, he might then move to drive them out of the organization. If he took that course he would at least discredit the indorsement of the antistrike amendment, but if he doesn't do something loud and emphatic old Longwords will give silent consent to a labor-baiting program which makes Tom Girdler's meanest thoughts on the subject read real nice.

Everything is so queer in this land where now it is solemnly proposed to issue queer money that a person of normal mind runs a risk of being locked up on sight as a mental case. So please bear in mind that it ain't me but the facts which are dizzy. The facts are that the California Communist C. I. O. is supporting an amendment which would cancel labor's right to strike and justifies this course as an act of gratitude to the ham-and-eggs racket for its help in defeating an antipicketing law last year. If you can't strike, there is no reason to picket, and the right to picket obviously withers into total unimportance if the right to strike is gone.

Faithful Imitation Of Hitler's Naziism

BUT THERE YOU have the situation, and, just for extra, you might stir in the peculiar fact that this ham-and-eggs which the Communists are boosting is the most faithful imitation of Adolf Hitler's national socialism that has yet been offered in the U. S. A. I will go into a comparison one of these days, but in the present mood I would like to point out a touching little scene in which all the standard-gauge citizens and businessmen who view ham-and-eggs with great alarm are quoting Upton Sinclair and old Doc Townsend as though these two old economic queeries were highly respected pillars of the system.

It was only a few years ago that they were chalking marks on Sinclair's coat, advising people to be nice to a harmless nut, and, of course, the old Doc never has been higher than eccentric until now. But in the present emergency Sinclair said the ham-and-eggs thing was no good, and the old Doc, recognizing it as a dastardly attempt to milk his cow, denounced it as an economic fallacy, which was something special, coming from the author of the old original dream-bucks proposal to the peculiar California mentality.

California Revolt Would Be Salutary

THEIR OPINIONS make better political matter than anything that might be said by J. P. Morgan and that guy over in England whose name I am not quite sure of and don't want to take a chance on lest it turn out to be the name of a playwright. They are even printing the opinion of Franklin D. Roosevelt in disapproval of ham-and-eggs, and when the leading citizens of Calliornia quote our beloved President as an economic sage their desperation is plain.

Yet it might be a good thing to try ham-and-eggs, have a cheap little revolution, some incidental killings and State bankruptcy and get done with all this monkey business which keeps California always upset and inefficient. If this dictator attempted to exercise the powers which he has written into the law for himself he would sure as hell be lynched or chased over the line or into the sea, because California, though her people will stand for plenty, just isn't going to take a dictator. Labor wouldn't yield the right to strike and picket, and the rank and file probably would bat the ears off the C. I. O.'s Communist managers and run them out for trying to Hitlerize them in a labor front.

Of course, the State would go broke and would have to start over, but some State has got to take the fall and furnish a sobering example for the rest, and California seems nearer ready than any other.

The Overturn In French Canada

Liberal Party Victory Important To Entire Country

By Raleigh Parkin

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Montreal

THE RECENT provincial election in Quebec which resulted in the overwhelming defeat of Maurice Duplessis' Union Nationale government by the Liberal party under the leadership of the Hon. Adelard Godbout, has been an event of more than passing importance not only for the province but for Canada generally.

Canadians were startled when M. Duplessis suddenly announced a few weeks ago, his intention to hold a provincial election, despite the fact that his administration, elected in August 1936, had still almost two years to run, and enjoyed an overwhelming superiority in the Provincial legislature. He alleged that the various measures taken by the Dominion government since the outbreak of war, and especially those arising from the War Measures Act, involved an unwarranted and intolerable infringement of provincial autonomy, which must be resisted if the rights of French Canada in Confederation were to be preserved. He insisted that he was not opposed to Canadian help being extended to Great Britain, but claimed that the Dominion government's actions were an unnecessary usurpation of power for this purpose.

ENGLISH speaking Canada, even those provinces such as Ontario, which in recent years had shown themselves almost as jealous as Quebec on the subject of provincial rights and accepted and even endorsed a wide assumption of powers by the Dominion government as a necessary feature of Canada's war effort. Therefore widespread criticism and indignation found expression in the English press throughout Canada at M. Duplessis' action.

It was pointed out that the Dominion government through the Prime Minister, Mr. MacKenzie King, and through its leading French Canadian member, M. Ernest Lapointe, had given repeated assurances to Quebec that it need not fear conscription for overseas service being imposed by any government with which they were connected.

Dr. Manion, the leader of the Conservative opposition, had given similar assurance. If Quebec, which was known to be bitterly opposed to conscription and which still entertained bitter memories of the conscription measure which the Canadian government, dominated by English-speaking Canadians, had imposed in the last war, had been so fully reassured on this point by both the great parties, what justification was there for M. Duplessis to precipitate an issue which could only tend to disrupt national unity and weaken the Dominion's war effort?

In fact, it was widely felt that M. Duplessis had been impelled to seek re-election now rather than two years later because of the financial position in the province. Heavy expenditures incurred during the three years of the Union Nationale regime seemed likely to necessitate considerably increased provincial taxation in the near future. No government cares to face an electorate in which the recent record has been one of taxing rather than of spending, and it seemed fairly clear that the Duplessis government would have been faced with just such a situation some time before August 1941.

THE EXTENT to which the issue had come to be regarded as one of national importance was emphasized when the three French Canadian members who represented Quebec in the Canadian Federal cabinet, headed by M. Ernest Lapointe, the Minister of Justice, took the unusual course of launching themselves into the provincial fight, stating that the return of M. Duplessis' party to power would result in their resignation from the Federal cabinet.

The clear implication of this was that Quebec would lose its French Canadian representation at Ottawa—a situation that would have been without precedent since Confederation and would have created a grave situation, probably necessitating a Federal general election. Throughout Canada people of all parties were greatly concerned at the consequence which would ensue from a victory of M. Duplessis, all the more so because at the outset such a victory seemed almost inevitable.

There were few in the early stages of the campaign who were prepared to prophesy the contrary. Therefore it was with widespread relief that Canadians heard on the night of October 25 that the provincial Liberals had gained a victory as sweeping as that which three years earlier M. Duplessis' Union Nationale party had won over the Liberal regime, until shortly before led by Mr. Taschereau, which had enjoyed an uninterrupted tenure of power in the province for thirty-nine years.

THE RESULT has been acclaimed as indicating the unqualified support of French Canada for the Dominion government's war policy. Unquestionably the Liberal victory will have this result in a very real sense. For three years Quebec has had a government which has refused to give any cooperation to the Dominion government. Some reasonable degree of co-operation has been essential in any country having a Federal system if the social and economic problems of a contemporary world are to be solved.

The lack of co-operation from Quebec, as well as some other provinces, has paralyzed such efforts as the Dominion government has made to grapple with problems such as those relating to unemployment insurance. Alone amongst the provinces the government of M. Duplessis refused even to present a brief to the all-important Royal Commission on Dominion-Provincial Relations. Now that government is gone, and it seems reasonable to expect from its successor a substantially different and more co-operative attitude.

BUT THERE were undoubtedly other factors which influenced the recent vote in Quebec. To the English speaking elector in a large urban center such as Montreal, the issue appeared clear—a vote for M. Duplessis was a vote for non-co-operation with the Dominion at a vital moment in the nation's history. It is by no means certain, however, that a majority of the French Canadian voters in the predominantly important rural constituencies was primarily influenced by quite the same considerations. There seems reason for believing that to a very important extent the vote expressed the desire of French Canada for national unity quite apart from the question of active co-operation on the side of Great Britain and France in the war in Europe.

In addition, purely provincial considerations, local attitudes toward certain of the Union Nationale government's measures, believed shortcomings of the late regime, will have played their part. Unquestionably M. Duplessis' government had come to incur a certain general measure of unpopularity.

Lastly, more than one competent observer of Quebec politics has been inclined to believe that one important factor in the result was an instinctive fear on the part of the French Canadian voter of losing influential representation of vital French Canadian interests and attitudes in the Dominion cabinet, with all that this might imply for the relations of Quebec to the dominant English majority in Canada. Such people say that what Quebec feared from a Duplessis victory was a deeper involvement of French Canada in war participation through loss of influence at Ottawa.

CERTAIN results not directly connected with matters of war policy seem likely to result from the Liberal victory. Greater cooperation with Ottawa holds out better ultimate prospects of dealing with the many urgent problems which have been the subject of study over two years now, by the Royal Commission on Dominion-Provincial Relations—subjects very similar to those with which the administration in Washington has been wrestling since 1933.

The prospects of national unity in the widest sense of the word are measurably improved. Again, Quebec is the only province in Canada where women do not enjoy the provincial vote. It now seems possible that this long-overdue reform may come. Governmental administration may become more orderly and less dictatorial. Civil liberties of the traditional British type may, subject only to the Dominion government's wartime interference, be more respected.

But all these things remain to be proved in action. The former long period of Liberal rule in Quebec could hardly be described as progressive, and it can perhaps be said of M. Duplessis' regime that it introduced at least the idea of social legislation, however ill-conceived certain particular measures may have been. Canadians will be watching with interest in the months to come to see in what direction the new Liberal government, which now succeeds to power, will move.

Uncle Sam Needs More Hired Hands Like This One

A conscientious retired rural mail carrier sent Uncle Sam $30 yesterday, because, in his day, he had carried passengers who, in turn, were carrying packages which maybe should have been sent through the mail.

In a letter from his Pennsylvania home, the former mailman wrote that he believed "the Postoffice Department was deprived of some $30 "worth of revenue" through his action of carrying package-bearing passengers on his route.

The Thrill That Comes Once in a Lifetime

Building Up To Letdown

By Mark Sullivan

Warning To Allies

OF ALL SOURCES of tragedy, one of the most painful is to create expectations which cannot be lived up to. The false expectation may be caused by either party to a situation, innocently. It may be caused by one party seeming, by his manner, to hold out a promise—when in fact he intended no promise. Or it may be caused by the hope and optimism of the other party, who sees a promise where no promise was intended. The situation can arise between men, and it can arise between nations. Just now it is arising between the United States and, on the other hand, Britain and France.

The United States has enacted a neutrality law which will permit belligerents to buy arms from American manufacturers, provided the buyer nation carries the arms away from America in its own ships. The circumstances of the war are such—Britain having control of the sea—that this new law of ours works to the advanage of the Allies. Naturally the Allied peoples are pleased. In their pleasure they read into our neutrality law more than it contains in fact.

What our neutrality law intends is written plainly in its words. It is made clear that we will do exactly what the law says, and no more.

BUT THIS WILL NOT prevent the Allies from seeing in our action more than actually is in it. They, building not upon our action but upon their own hopes and wishes, will assume that we have dedicated ourselves to helping them. Right now, it is safe to say, British and French newspapers are describing the action of our Congress in joyful headlines which imply more than the facts justify. Already, when our neutrality law was approved by the Senate on October 27, the London Mirror cried out, "Allied Victory in the United States."

This is natural. Britain, battling for existence, is cheered to know she will not be prevented from buying arms in America. Not only are these headlines a sincere expression of elation. They are designed to, or have the effect of, helping the morale of the British people. The British people, reading only the headlines and not the dispatches, and never by any chance reading our neutrality law, will assume that America has done more than in fact it has done.

But if this goes on it will lead to expectations greater than the United States has any notion of fulfilling. Presently the man in the London streets will be wondering why we are belated in taking an active hand in the war. Recalling the American soldiers who passed through England to fight in the Great War, he will ask how soon their sons are to arrive for this war. And when we don't arrive, he, disappointed in expectations which he himself set up, will turn glowering looks toward America.

America Will NOT Send Army Abroad

THIS COULD HAVE been avoided by our not passing the law. Precisely to avoid this was large reason why many Congressmen voted against the law. This is why the measure was warningly described by many as a step toward entering the war. But we could hardly be limited in a national policy by mere apprehension of an impression that might arise.

There is a better way to avoid false expectation. The Allies should understand that our adopting a neutrality law which appears to work to their advantage, does not mean that we will take a part in this war. The Allied statesmen should understand this, clearly and finally, and they should make their people understand it. That America will not send an army to Europe is a universal national determination, a fixed national policy.

Those London headlines which record the enactment of our neutrality measure should record also a feature of the debate in which the law was passed. The Congressmen who favored the measure, as well as those who opposed, said over and over that never would they vote to send an American army to Europe. Every individual in Congress would make that pledge if there were occasion for it. If any did not make the pledge, it was because they felt the matter is so completely settled that a pledge is not called for.

NOW LET US turn to another kind of false expectation, in another quarter. As the Allied press prints such American news as will cheer their people, so does the Nazi press print what will make useful propaganda among their people. They print fragmentary sentences, detached from the context, of American speeches and articles. They may pick a sentence or two from what is here written, and quote it as assurance to the German people that Germany need fear nothing from America.

Nazis will draw from our neutrality law a meaning favorable to themselves. They will point out that by our neutrality law we go extraordinary lengths to avoid involvement in the war. We voluntarily withdraw our merchant ships from Europe, or anywhere near Europe. We leave practically all the North Atlantic to the belligerents, confining our own merchant ships to a strip along our own shore. From this, Germany may conclude that to avoid involvement America will do anything, suffer anything.

Nazis should not be too sure. While we are determined not to send an American army to Europe, there are other ways in which we might meet attack upon our interests. We have a powerful Navy. If Nazi submarines, going far outside the area of war, attack our merchant ships in the restricted area to which we have withdrawn—Nazis may find that the American Navy would defend our merchant ships against wanton attack. Such use of our Navy, American opinion would approve if the occasion arose.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Obligation Of The Winners

UPON ALL OF US who supported the repeal of the arms embargo and the substitution of cash-and-carry there rests an obligation of personal honor to prove that the policy now adopted will not involve the United States as a combatant in the European war. There are many honest men and women who believe or who have been taught to believe that the repeal of the arms embargo will fatally lead to American participation. We have contended that they were wrong, and after thorough debate they have been overruled. It is now the task of the President, of the majority in both houses of Congress, and of the rest of us who supported the new policy to show the minority not only that we have been acting in absolute good faith and also that our judgment has been sound.

The responsibility is ours, and this is the proper moment to fix it clearly in our minds and to avow it unequivocally.

Political Truce Should Be Kept

IN ORDER TO discharge that responsibility it is indispensable that in all matters pertaining to the war the Administration should maintain scrupulously the existing political truce and the present cooperation with Congress. Above all, this means that in administering the neutrality law and in conducting foreign affairs, the Administration should make it an habitual rule to keep the responsible leaders of Congress fully informed and to consult them before taking any important decision. There are some men in the minority—it is not necessary to name them—who are unreliable and cannot be taken into anyone's confidence. But they are only a few. It has been demonstrated in this special session that careful collaboration between the Administration and Congress is not only possible but highly effective, and nothing is more important than that this collaboration should be continued, should be deepened, and should become the custom.

This means giving up all temptation to make impulsive, personally invented, dramatic gestures, and to hold rigorously to the rule of taking decisions slowly but surely, cautiously but consistently, adhering always to the regular and lawful procedure, shunning short cuts, cleverness, and any kind of indirection.

Fully Informed Congress Needed

THE ONLY CERTAIN way to convince the whole Nation that this is the practice and there is no ground for suspicion is to make fully and continuously available to representative Republicans and to Democrats who are not New Dealers all relevant information about what is going on. The information that the newspapers can print will not be enough; there is always information, particularly about measures that are still being contemplated, which the Congressional leaders can obtain only by being taken into the confidence of the President and his principal officials.

Necessarily, it will mean also the treatment of domestic issues in the same spirit and by the same procedure. Obviously, the President cannot now afford to divide the country internally; his failure to recognize that he must not carry on the domestic conflict was the cause of the disaster of last winter and summer which nearly wrecked his foreign policy.

He will wreck it again if he does not lay it down as a cardinal rule for himself and his subordinates that new measures will be proposed, that existing laws will be administered or revised, only by agreement with a non-partisan majority in Congress, and always in the atmosphere of a common desire to unify the Nation and conserve its strength.

Coming Election Holds Real Threat

IT WILL SOON be necessary also to develop a coherent attitude towards the peculiar problem of the coming Presidential election. This is a much more complicated problem than it seems, and it will need to be carefully discussed now that the neutrality bill is out of the way.

In the last analysis, it is not a question of whether Mr. Roosevelt is to have a third term. For I feel reasonably sure that when the problem is studied, it will be evident to him that he must renounce a third term. The real question is how in the midst of so serious a crisis, his successor can be nominated and elected without dividing the country, paralyzing the Government, and causing confusion and insecurity throughout the world. To find the right solution will require much thought, and for the moment I do not think anyone can do more than to begin to define the real problem. But until a solution becomes plain, it is obviously the duty of Mr. Roosevelt and his supporters not to play factional politics of any kind.

History Will Show Record Of Good Faith

IF THE GOVERNMENT is conducted in this spirit and by such methods, the majority who have prevailed in Congress will convince the minority that they have acted in good faith. There will remain to be proved, however, that their judgment has been sound, that the policy adopted will make this country secure, keep it out of the European battlefields, and fortify the case of freedom in the world.

The evidence will not be in until the history of these times is concluded. But on the evidence now available, given the kind of war that is being fought, it will, I believe, soon become clear to everyone that this war is not going to be decided on any battlefield and that no American Army will be or could be sent to any European battlefield in this war.

Poor Manners Laid to Russia By Roosevelt

President Roosevelt ascribed poor manners to Russia yesterday. The United States Government also had been exercised by difficulty in getting official information from Russia relative to the American vessel City of Flint.

The Once Over

Thanksgiving—1939

Proclamation:

Thanksgiving Day is a revered American institution, dear to the hearts of the people. From those early days when the Pilgrim fathers struggled in a wilderness for sustenance it has held a firm place in the spiritual life of America. From the days of its first observance (back in the days when it fell on the same day under the Democrats as it did under the Republicans) it has been a day of gratitude for the blessings of life.

More than 150 years ago a little band of colonists dropped to their knees in a gesture of thanksgiving—and they did so with no misgivings whether they were doing it on the wrong day or not.

These brave and godly men and women felt that the main idea was thanksgiving. They weren't bent on being original, novel or alert to trends. They didn't give a hoot whether it benefited seasonal trade or not. All they were thinking about was thanksgiving. In their hearts was a consuming emotion of deep gratitude. Not a Pilgrim said, "But we should have done this a week earlier on account of business conditions."

It was a cold winter. The winds howled through the trees as they assembled, they could see the fresh tracks of the redskin in the snow. Things had been tough and the pickup had been slow. But expediency was not in their minds or hearts. The day would do.

Down through the years this touching tradition has been venerated among our people. Each season Thanksgiving has been looked forward to, and without danger of seeing double. Every year the people of America have assembled in home and church to express gratitude for the harvest . . . and nobody had to quit the harvest ahead of time to ascertain the right date for the devotions.

Now, therefore, I, Elmer Twitchell, Governor of the State of ———, do hereby proclaim one of the last Thursdays in November as Thanksgiving Day, hastening to do so because of a fear that the matter may be further complicated. Whatever we do let us not approach Thanksgiving so muddled by conflicting proclamations that we will be lacking in the spirit of gratitude, or so confused by mere calendar dates that we will land home after everything but the wing and neck have gone.

I therefore declare it a matter of choice, urge the people to celebrate either day or both, as long as they do it out of a full heart, and I set my hand and seal to this proclamation in the belief it won't mean a thing to business either way.

Whether your life is long or short
Will largely depend on Gen. Gort.

The idea is intriguing:

Whether this war is bigger or littler
Is something depending somewhat on Hitler.

Whether we're whole, alive or lame
Depends on General . . . what's his name?

Whether you'll fight a year or more
Depends on whether this war is war.

The question of living on or not

Gladys Swarthout Now Found One of Those Who Stand on Heads

WHEN SOMEONE asks you point blank whether you want the truth about something, you can't always be sure that you do! And I wavered for a moment when Gladys Swarthout, opera star, put the question to me in reply to my request for her beauty program.

For a moment I was afraid she might not do a single, solitary thing! But she does it all! And those of you who sincerely want a program that will enhance your looks could not do better than copy singing star.

Miss Swarthout is famous for her beautiful hair, and also for her addiction to the hairbrush. She not only brushes her shining glory for 5 to 10 minutes every night, but she carries a brush around in her handbag and uses it instead of a comb during the day. If you want beautiful hair, brushing is the one thing above all else that will help you to get it.

Stands On Her Head

Miss Swarthout is another of those beauties who stand on their heads. There must be something to it—so many of them are lovely to look at! She stands on her head several times a day and does the wall climbing exercise. In this you lie on the back on the floor with the hips up close to the wall, "walk" up the wall until the body is in a straight line, then walk down again. That exercise is a peach for slimming the midsection. Naturally, she has lovely measurements: Bust, 35 inches; waist, 23 inches; hips, 35 inches. She is 5 feet 3½ inches tall and weighs 125 pounds. All streamlined curves.

She is a firm believer in the rowing machine. She is sure rowing has added more than an inch to her bust measurement and it has improved her breathing. She inhales on the pull, exhales on the release. Breathing, this beauty says, is very important.

"Sometimes when I am entering a room and hesitate, I pull myself together, take a good, deep breath and go right on in—it helps to make a good entrance."

Weight Not a Worry

Posture is another all-important factor. An erect posture always helps a woman to look her best. "A woman can look like a queen in a rag if she holds herself proudly," Miss Swarthout says. Her rules for posture are: Chin level, chest and tummy up, and no rear projection!

When trying to get to sleep after a strenuous day, she practices this stretching exercise:

Lie on the back in bed, stretch the right arm up on the mattress and p-u-l-l. Relax completely, bring the arm down to the side, and let it lie limp as the left arm is stretched upward. To feel her best Miss Swarthout must have nine hours of sleep a night, and she likes at least 30 winks every afternoon.

Weight is not one of her worries. She just makes sure that she eats sensibly.

"Opera singers do not eat like they used to," she is convinced. "They used to have enormous meals after a performance and then go straight to bed. Now they have light, easily digested meals."

The Swarthout program is an around-the-clock affair—and so is any other program that really works.

Count Calories To Reduce

Hats off to Mrs. Slim, formerly Mrs. Pudgy. She's slipped off her ugly pounds, looks slim as a girl!

How did the one-time Mrs. Pudgy perform this miracle? Why, by divorcing herself from all those fat-producing high-calory foods she'd been indulging in.

By adopting a diet of tempting low-calory foods, in a brief 12 weeks she lost 24 pounds—dropped from a paunchy 160 pounds to a pleasing 136.

You can do it, too, if you follow her diet of 1200 calories a day, turn your back on such fattening meals as this one: A slice of roast loin of pork—300 calories, a baked sweet potato—200, a 3-inch slice of raisin pie—350. That's 850 calories in all.

What a difference when you substitute a slice of roast beef—100 calories, a baked white potato —100, ½ cup rainsin rice pudding —100. Only 300 calories!

In no time you look slimmer, feel better, too. And if you are afraid your palate may balk at an unaccustomed diet, promise yourself one or two indulgence days a month, when you may have a rich dessert, an extra amount of whipped cream.

Scotch Thrift at the Stadium

When George Washington and Clemson, or Army and Notre Dame tussle today, there may be more than one smart girl spectator wearing the plaids of her home clan. Plaids, especially in men's suiting materials, have high fashion significance this season. Most exciting is a new wool plaid that looks, and actually washes, like a soft linen handkerchief. Pictured above is such a plaid in stadium colors, clear blue with red overplaids, done in the popular Glen Urguhart pattern. The material, though pure wool, is guaranteed washable, is pre-shrunk, crease resistant and color fast—features dear to the heart of a thrifty Scot. The styling of the frock is gay and carefree with bracelet-length sleeves, coin belt, slit skirt pockets and front fullness. Unconditional Surrender to Love Is Tragic Blunder, Readers Tell School Girl, Citing Instances

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: After reading the high school girl's letter in your column of October 31, I felt immediately that I wanted to contact her and offer a plea to "watch your step." I am neither a prude nor an old fogey; I'm probably just about her age, so it isn't a narrow-minded attitude which prompts me to issue an urgent warning to her not to "surrender" to the boy she loves.

One of my dearest girl friends suffered disaster in "surrendering," and perhaps if I tell her story, it may help this youngster to be strong. My friend was one of the most popular girls in her class. She was unusually pretty and had what is known as "personality plus." After having her fling of nightly dates with a whole string of "rah-rah" boys, she settled down to one fellow, whom she considered "the one man in the world."

He was five years her senior, handsome, splendid dancer, steadily employed and had a host of friends. All her chums were envious of her. He whispered the very same story into her ears that is being told to your correspondent, that old gag about "we'll simply have to break up; I can't stand to go on like this without having you." And she paid, rather than lose him. But this was only the beginning. Having given in, she was terror stricken, and allowed him to dictate in full. She felt she had to hold him, then, and he assured her there was only one way.

My chum went on for two or three months in this state of affairs, and then became pregnant. She had thought she was "protected," but she learned what any physician could have told her, that there is no completely reliable "protection." The boy bought some very questionable drugs and began to administer them to her. He only succeeded in making her very ill. Because of her constant illness, her condition became apparent and in desperation she told her mother that she had been married secretly for several months.

Her mother, in her ignorance, tried to give the young folks a good start in married life by announcing the marriage, holding a "shower" party for the bride, and fixing an apartment for them on the second floor of her home. They were caught in a trap. They had gone too far to back down; they had no alternative to starting "housekeeping." The girl's illness finally brought about a miscarriage at the sixth month, which left her in a state of physical collapse.

But she is still facing her worst problem. The man supports her, lives openly with her, but will not go through with a marriage ceremony. His reason, a very poor one, is that "everyone thinks we are married; it isn't necessary." Her hands are tied. She can't go to court, for two reasons: (a) the whole miserable story would be broadcast, and (b) she cannot force him to marry her so long as she hasn't a child of his.

She can't go to her mother or his because the truth would break their hearts, even if they could forgive. She lives in constant fear of discovery and utter humiliation. And there you have a picture of the girl who was the leader of her crowd a year ago. She weighs less than 100 pounds, her nerves are "shot" from worry, and she is on the brink of suicide. I know nothing to do to help her, although I want to badly. But it is too late. That's why I'm writing—to warn "C. F. S." before it is too late. Let her take my advice and get a plain gold band on her finger first. . . . I never had my friends beauty and personality, and was always about as popular as Patsy Kelly would be in a Golden Mirror contest, but I've got the sweetest husband and baby in the world. C.

It's Wise to Remember "Thou Shalt Nots"

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Being a fairly consistent reader of your column, I have become quite as much intrigued by the writer as interested in the writings. Never having seen a biographical sketch, I wonder as to the marital status and the social, religious and educational background of the author of these diverse gems of wisdom.

It is quite manifest that you have the natural attributes, assiduously cultivated, which make for success in the newspaper field, and these have enabled you to lift this sort of column to a very high plane. More often than one would wish, however, the subject matter presents appalling conflicts of a moral nature which men and women are meeting today.

You seem to pin much faith in applied psychology and psychiatry, I grant that these are helpful, now and again. But an authoritative, "Thus saith the Lord," should also be spoken to these floundering souls. . . . Your excellent advice, of October 31, to "C. F. S.," for example, might well have been fortified with the divine reminder, "Thou shalt not." Very sincerely yours. L. R. G.

A Word of Warning, Based on Experience

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I've never written this kind of letter before, but the problem discussed in your column of October 31—that of a high school girl who thinks of "surrendering" to the boy she loves—is so widely debated today that I want to offer a word of warning, based on experience.

I finished high school and began dating in 1924, and never gave in to any boy's line until I started going with the man who is now my husband. Although he knew enough to prevent any complications which might have led to a "forced marriage," I have always felt since that we should not have married, as he lost respect for me and trust in me, despite knowing that he was the only one.

We have been married for 12 years and he still neither respects nor trusts me, even though he knows I am a completely faithful wife. We live in the same house but practically go our separate ways. Much of this I blame on pre-marital intimacy, for I feel if it hadn't been for that, we might not have married.

No girl should ever give in to the lines that are handed out by boys. It is only a rare case when she doesn't regret it later, and, also, the boys don't really appreciate it. Sincerely, K.

A Woman's New York

New York, Nov. 3.

THE MORAL COLLAPSE of the Old World has definitely moved the center of fashion to the Western Hemisphere, and let Paris moan and groan as it likes, Mainbocher, the corset-lad who came from Iowa, stopped here, and then became a power in Paree, is thinking seriously of setting up his fancy business either here or in Hollywood, where the movie gold is. Already we have dozens of able designers of our own, and as an old-time revoltee against French domination of American duds, I holler hurray for the home team.

Hollywood people, plus this town's Clare Potter, have long led the world in sports clothes, and there are at least a dozen designers right in this town who can tie or top any of those Parisian big shots whose unique eminence has been taken for granted far too long, and over-boosted by our fashion mags. It's really silly when we think how a "Paris label" has so long hypnotized so many of our women.

The present American designers are working frantically, and to good effect, and our eyes are fixed on the smart trade in the great South American countries, whose rich women have also been slaves of the Roo de la Poo. I am fascinated by South American business, and I am now busy with an extensive study of these potential new markets. Slogans are a cinch, no? "American clothes for the Americas," and all that sort of pish-posh. It is goulish to say, perhaps, that we are going to strike off our snobbish fetters while France prepares to go through some of her darkest hours. But we too have geniuses and clever promoters, and American women, so far, show no signs of giving up good clothes and wearing burlap bags to parties. As the Irish used to say, "Up, the rebels!"

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Strolling Madison avenue a recent sunny afternoon, minding everybody's business, who came along but the dream man of my young girlhood, Mr. Carlyle Blackwell, ace wonder man of the old silent screen. When I was in high school, I used to play the piano in one of Manchester's nickelodeons, and when Carlyle clasped the heroine to his buzzim, I fear I hit many a sour note. He went to England, made a few flicks, married a diamond-rich Mrs. Barnato, then came back home free. He's still a mighty handsome bird, with greying hair, and has kept his figger well. I don't know what he is up to at the moment, but I did get a kick out of the old-time star who gave me girlish shivers years ago.

Attending the local newspaper forum, to hear high-class oratory, I was thrown off base by the constant clatter of knitting needles. Seemed like at least half the ladies present were purling away for dear life. I felt sorry for Doc Dafoe, the quints' guide and guardian. The poor man has had to talk about the five youngsters day in, day out since May, 1934, and small wonder he hasn't a single new thing to say about them in current speeches.

MURIEL KING, one of our top clothes designers, is so lovely that she is her own best model. Another of our Seattle girls who's made good very big.

"Now I wonder which one is the Duchess . . ."

"I don't think she's come in yet. No wait—I wonder if she could be that stunning looking woman over there in black—see with the rope of pearls and the orchids?"

"That! Why that's only Marge Skeet. You know—she has that publicity bureau."

"Oh, of course. Say! See that woman over there in that marvelous silver fox cape—with the red turban? Now that might be the Duchess."

"Which one? . . . Oh, I see. No! That's Mrs. Rutherford Chives—the one that has that dress shop."

"Oh-h! Well, I just don't see anyone here who could possibly be the Duchess."

"I don't either—unless it could be that awfully smart woman over there by the mantel—see with the leopard hat and muff?"

"Oh I know who that is! That's Sadie Clipp. You know, the stylist at Sailem's."

"Wait now—there's a woman who's just come in who might be the Duchess."

"Which one?"

"In the brown velvet with the beaver toque."

"And the topaz necklace?"

"Yes. Now that's not costume jewelry. Let's edge over that way."

"All right . . . Wait a minute! This woman on the other side of me says the woman in the brown velvet is a Mrs. O'Flair. She's some big woman in advertising."

"Well, the Duchess surely must be here by this time. Say, I believe I've got her spotted. See the terribly distinguished one in the Persian lamb . . . and the diamond clips . . . and the gardenias on her pocketbook?"

"No-o, that woman looks familiar . . . Oh, I know who she is! She's that Miss Spellmaster who's in charge of public relations for the Octopus Company . . . Say though, wait a minute—I see a woman who might be the Duchess."

"Which one?"

"The one with all that jade—see in black. The foreign looking one."

"Oh! Don't you know who that is? That's that Mrs. Mike Pace—that society woman there's all that talk about."

"Of all things! Say, wait a minute! Do you see what I see?"

"I think I do. The one coming in in the plum velvet cocktail suit?"

"Yes, with the Russian skunk hat and the big pillow muff?"

"Yes and the pearls . . ."

"And all those diamond rings?"

"Yes. Say, let's edge over that way. See, everybody's trying to get introduced."

"Yes, and the photographer's taking her picture. She certainly has a patrician carriage?"

"Say, you'd better hold on to your place. It's funny how people act about celebrities . . . Is my nose shiny?"

"No. Is mine?"

"No, but I wish I could get to my compact. Say, you'd better hold your place."

"I am—only—say listen! There's something wrong."

"What do you mean?"

"Somebody in front said they were introducing this woman as Miss 'Van Glitter.'"

"No. . . .Van Glitter? . . . Van Glitter? . . . Oh, say, that's the name of that New York expert who's down here introducing those Dreadnaught corsets."

"Of all things! . . . Well, let's get out of this jam."

"That certainly is a joke on all those women. Just look how they're crowding up."

"All except that little woman over there by the window talking to the man."

"The plain one in the tweeds?"

"Yes. I wonder who she is . . . Wait, I'll ask this woman next to me . . . Say!"

"What?"

"THAT'S THE DUCHESS!"

Women Who Have Way With Fingers Can Do Wonders

Sew a seam of silkiness, a pocket full of pins—a lady with a sewing machine has the world at her feet, decoratively speaking. For a pleasant home is not nearly so much a matter of rare furniture as it is of colors and details lovingly assembled, and the actual workmanship is the most expensive ingredient in a room that's "boughten." So to a lady who has a way with her fingers and an eye for style, a pretty room doesn't have near so much to do with budgets as with needles and thread. For curtains and furniture coverings make—if not all the difference—at least a big part of it.

Here are notes on fall curtain fashions that we've made on our visits to current decorative exhibitions:

White voile curtains made to hang straight to the floor and finished at the top with a quilted sateen valance in a floral design.

Flame taffeta, unlined and tied back with white rope cords and finished at the top with a white ruff.

Rose damask draperies, lined and weighted, hung with white rings on a damask covered pole with white plaster ends.

Monotone ensembles in which the draperies are in the identical same tone as the walls are a very high fashion point in curtain news this season.

Apple Pie With Cheese, Says Capt. 'Turk' Edwards

Favorite foods of Washington men are featured in this column.

By Martha Ellyn,

The Post Food Editor.

IN BOSTON in 1932, was born the Redskin football team. On this original team was "Turk" Edwards, who has for four years captained the Washington Redskins. There were 68 men on this original squad and at the end of the season eight remained to carry on. "Turk" was among them. When the Chicago Bears and the Washington Redskins battled on an icy football field in Chicago in 1937, wearing basketball shoes instead of football shoes, it was "Turk" who captained the team that defeated the Chicago Bears by a score of 28-21, to win the title of world football champions.

Mr. Edwards

This conqueror of gridirons, weighing 260 pounds and standing 6 feet, 2 inches high, was born Albert G. Edwards in Spokane, Wash., and played college football at Washington State University. When I asked Washington's football idol what he liked to eat, he said "lots of everything." Among "everything" he lists steak, fried chicken, baking powder biscuits and ice cream, and he drinks a quart of milk each day. Coming from the great apple State of Washington, I asked him if apples were a favorite food. The answer was "that's a perfect guess, for I am very fond of apple pie with cheese, apple dumpling, apple fritters and anything made with apples."

The following recipe for "Turk's" favorite pie—apple—was given me by Edwina Nolan, director of home economics, General Electric Co.

Apple Pie

Peel, core and slice apples to have 3 cups. Add ¾ cup sugar, juice of ½ lemon, 2 tablespoons flour and ¼ teaspoon cinnamon. Allow to stand while rolling the pastry. Roll out pastry, line pie pan and cut off edge. Add apples and dot with butter. Cover with pastry. Allow top crust to overlap the lower crust ½ inch, cut even with shears. Moisten lower edge to perfectly seal and fold top crust under the lower. Crimp edges. Bake from 40 to 50 minutes at 126 degrees.

Sofas With Internal Troubles Cause Much Irritation

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

Most American families these days are bounded on one side by their newspapers and on the other by their radios. And since the prospects are that we'll probably spend the winter thus, it mightn't be a bad idea to give the living room a going-over before settling down to politics and war news.

If the family sofa is having internal troubles with bulging springs and sinking spots, call in the upholsterer and get an estimate on how much it will cost to get its insides repaired. Then figure on what you'd have to spend for a fresh slip cover. You may well find that all this would cost nearly as much as a new sofa, especially if you've let the inner springs go too long.

Then have a look at the easy chairs—or are they really easy? Why not add a new comfortable chair or two, just for good measure or to replace some that should be retired. Preferably sturdy upholstered chairs, but if the budget won't stand that much of a strain, there's a surprising lot of good sitting in plain willow arm chairs with cushions and hassocks. If they're stained or painted to match the room, they can look very nice.

We'd bet our favorite rose bush that you could use a new occasional table or so, not a little tiddledy-wink but one big enough to be of real use, low and broad and maybe in a bleached wood finish just for accent.

Archibald MacLeishes Honored at Dinner

Connors Entertain Poet and His Wife; Dudley Woodses Hosts at Small Party; Mrs. McCeney Werlich Fetes Diplomat

IT'S SUPPOSED to be a quiet season, but yesterday and last evening there were enough luncheons and dinners going on to make it seem like Washington at the height of a nonwar year. Several visitors to Washington, an official or two, and a number of departing Representatives and their wives were feted by several attractive Capital hostesses. One characteristic of parties this year seems to be that they are smaller than in other winters, and yesterday's functions were limited to 12 or 15 guests, or even fewer.

The gifted poet and Librarian of the Library of Congress, Archibald MacLeish, and Mrs. MacLeish, were honored at a dinner given last night by the United States Archivist and Mrs. R. D. W. Connor, who entertained at their Connecticut avenue residence. The function also celebrated Mrs. Connor's return to the social fold, as she has been ill for the last year, and had to cut out most activities.

Though they did not know one another before Mr. MacLeish came to Washington, he and Mr. Connor have been associated from time to time in their work here. Those asked to meet them last evening were the former Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, Mr. and Mrs. William Chapin Huntington, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bunker (Mr. Bunker was formerly with the Carnegie Institute,) Mrs. Frederick Farrington and Dr. St. George Sioussat, head of the manuscript department of the Library of Congress.

The dining room table was decorated with daisy chrysanthemums which a friend of Mrs. Connor had brought her from Virginia, in shades of yellow, pink, rust and lavender.

A small, informal dinner was that given last night by Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Woods, who have the charming Louis McC. Little house in O street in Georgetown. Their guests were Laurence Bungardeanu, of the Rumanian Legation; Mr. and Mrs. George Howe, Mrs. Emmons Smith, Miss Caroline Duffield, of New York, who is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Woods, and Oliver Pendar, another New Yorker, who will make his home in Washington this winter.

Mr. Woods recently came here to work under Harry Hopkins, Secretary of Commerce. He and Mrs. Woods formerly resided in Manhattan.

Mrs. Werlich Is Dinner Hostess

On a larger scale was the dinner given by Mrs. McCeney Werlich at her home at 1623 Sixteenth street. This event, like the one at which the British Ambassador, Lord Lothian, entertain for the Right Hon. Alfred Duff-Cooper and the latter's wife, was shrouded in secrecy so far as the guest list was concerned. Mrs. Werlich's party was in honor of a diplomat whose country is at war, and guests at the British Embassy were chosen from this country's top-flight official circles.

As a double farewell for Mrs. Charles Halleck and Mrs. George Romney, Mrs. John Littlepage entertained at a pleasant luncheon yesterday at the Chevy Chase Club. Mrs. Halleck and her husband, who is Representative from Indiana, left for their home last evening after the House had repealed the embargo, and Mr. and Mrs. Romney will go shortly to Detroit, where he has accepted a new position.

The table at the club yesterday was decorated with yellow and rust-colored chrysanthemums. The other guests included Mrs. Dewey Short, Mrs. Thad Brown, Mrs. George Allen, Mrs. Harry Butcher, Mrs. John Russell, Mrs. Duke Patrick and Mrs. John Parker.

Although Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo, the honor guest, was prevented by illness from attending, the small luncheon planned for yesterday by Emly Newell Blair (Mrs. Harry W. Blair) went merrily off on schedule. Judge and Mrs. Blair have recently moved into the William Brown house at 212 Fairfax street, Alexandria, and yesterday's party gave a few of Mrs. Blair's friends an opportunity to see what she has done in the way of making the residence one of the most attractive around these parts.

Blair Home Scene of Party

Built back in the era when spacious rooms on different levels were the last word in fashion, the house also features mammoth fireplaces, handsomely carved mantels and huge locks on beautifully fashioned doors. Add to that the Blair Lares and Penates, and you have a residence that is reviving the glory of an era in which the Brown house was one of the most celebrated landmarks in Alexandria.

Mrs. William Stanley, who was among the guests yesterday, and who has a home in Laurel, Md., handsomely furnished with antiques, told Mrs. Blair she would like to trade a few pieces with her. Miss Ann Callaghan, who was also present, was especially impressed with the big second-floor room that originally was used as a parlor and is now a guest room.

Luncheon was served in the room that originally was the kitchen. A broad old-fashioned fireplace, a "Baltimore oven" to one side, and a cupboard on the other, were accents for this attractive room that opens into a garden.

Mrs. Wetherall and George Greenhalgh, Jr., To Attend Hunt Breakfast Before Wedding

IT SEEMS appropriate that Mrs. Sybilla Burwell Jacobs and George P. Greenhalgh, jr., who have shown horses together all over the country, should attend a hunt breakfast today a few hours before their marriage. The ceremony will take place tonight at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Burwell Jacobs, near Boyce. This noon Mr. and Mrs. Greenhalgh, sr. will entertain at a large hunt breakfast at their home, Springsbury." The Blue Ridge Hunt will meet there this morning at 9 o'clock.

Out-of-town guests here for the wedding will attend both the hunt and the breakfast, which will be gala affairs.

Among the many pre-nuptial parties in honor of the young couple was the dinner given last evening by Mr. and Mrs. William Bell Watkins at "Annefield," and the tea which Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bolling Byrd and Miss Margaret Byrd gave on Tuesday at "Kentmere," their residence near Boyce.

ANOTHER LARGE PARTY in the hunt country will be the hunt breakfast at which Mr. and Mrs. Amory Carhart will entertain today after the opening meet of the Warrenton Hunt, of which Mr. Carhart is Master. Among those who will motor out from Washington for the breakfast is Mrs. Ruth Lester Buchanan, a member of the hunt, and a keen follower to hounds when she lived in Warrenton.

Numbers of visitors have arrived in Middleburg for the fox-hunting season, and everything is in readiness for one of the largest meets of the year. Shining motor cars will fill the roads today as spectators follow and see much of the hunt.

MR. AND MRS. Morson Keith, of Charlottesville, and their daughter, Miss Ellie Wood Keith, who is attending Gunston Hall School, and Miss Sue Bolling were visitors to Middleburg this week. Others here included Clarence Hewes and George Williams, of Washington, who motored down for the day, and P. A. B. Widener, of Philadelphia, who is spending a few days with William F. Hitt.

Mrs. Rigan McKinney, of Long Island, who has been staying with Miss Nannie Fred, left this week, but will return to Middleburg shortly with Mr. McKinney and their small daughter, Kathleen, to occupy Burrland, which they have leased from William Zeigler for the winter. Mrs. McKinney is one of our leading riders to hounds and Rigan McKinney has for a number of years been the outstanding amateur steeplechase jockey of America.

MRS. Isabel Cotton-Smith, of Long Island, who spent last winter in Warrenton, has returned from Narragansett Pier, where she spent the summer, and is settled in the cottage on the estate of Edward Jenkins for the winter. She was formerly Mrs. Peter Labouisse, of New Orleans, and at one time had a house in Warrenton.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Felder, of New York—he is editor of Cue magazine—are guests of John Keith at his Warrenton home. Mr. Keith gave a dinner for the Felders earlier in the week.

Mrs. Alden Kimball, of New York, is in Warrenton as the guest of her sister, Mrs. Harry Pool. Mrs. Kimball, formerly Miss Anne Randolph, of Baltimore, has lived a great deal in this part of Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Pool gave a dinner in her honor this week and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Charrington gave a cocktail party for her. Mrs. Kimball, an accomplished musician, is frequently heard over the radio, and accommodatingly plays the piano at many parties here.

Pi Phis to Get Report On Mountain School

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

A first-hand account of the work being carried on at the Pi Beta Phi settlement school in Gatlinburg, Tenn., will be given to the Washington alumnae of the sorority by Mrs. E. M. Pace, of the national committee, at a settlement school meeting arranged for November 14, at the home of Miss Marion McCoy, local settlement school chairman, 4410 Sixteenth street. Mrs. Pace has just returned from a visit to the school accompanied by her husband, Capt. Pace, U. S. N.,—"and he is as enthusiastic about the project as I am," she said.

She came here from her home in Texas last May, when Capt. Pace was transferred to Washington for temporary duty with the Bureau of Aeronautics, and is one of five members of the Pi Beta Phi settlement school committee, which acts as the governing board of the institution under the direction of the grand council of the sorority.

The alumnae chapters throughout the country support the school, which was founded in 1912. A benefit bridge is to be given for it by the local alumnae club next Friday at the Women's Club of Chevy Chase. In connection with the event, Miss McCoy is arranging a display of articles of handicraft made by students and the older mountain people.

Institution Began As Elementary School

The institution, which now provides education including high school courses, for 400 students, was founded as an elementary school with six pupils. It was in a log cabin schoolhouse with one teacher. Gatlinburg then was reached over difficult mountain roads and the people of the section were too poor to support a school. The sorority's little log schoolhouse was the only one for miles around.

"At first the people regarded us as outsiders," said Mrs. Pace, "and part of our work was to win their confidence. Now they depend on us in many ways other than for schooling."

Gatlinburg, as the entrance to the newly developed Smoky Mountain National Park, no longer is a remote mountain village. Good roads lead to it from Knoxville and Asheville. At first glance, there would seem no longer any need for a settlement school, but there is. It serves children who come from poor districts as far as eight miles up the mountain over roads that are still difficult.

About 10 boys and 10 girls of high school age are boarding students, housed in dormitories, the girls doing the housework and the boys milking the cows and doing the farm work to pay board and room. In addition to academic studies, the older students are given practical courses in home economics and farm management and are taught weaving and various handicrafts.

Two years ago, says Mrs. Pace, the high school course was added and 100 per cent of the two graduating classes since have gone on with their educations. Two members of the present teaching staff are former students, who entered the school at the time it was founded and continued their schooling after finishing at Gatlinburg.

Physical Health Is Not Neglected

The sorority also maintains a public health nurse who ministers to the families from which the children come as well as to the pupils. She drives a sturdy little car over the rough trails and, when roads are impassible, sometimes takes to the rocky creek bed.

There is a supervisor who has taught the women of the section to weave. Some of them raise and spin their own cotton for their work. Others are provided materials by the sorority, but nearly every home has a spinning wheel, says Mrs. Pace. The women have a weavers' guild which meets once a month at the school. Some of them have to start at 6 in the morning to walk down the mountain and be there when the meeting opens at 8 a. m. They spend the day learning new designs, discussing their work and bringing it to be inspected and enjoy ice cream cones as refreshments. Their weaving under the name of "Arrowcraft" (from the sorority's insignia) is sold at sorority meetings. A new weaving center is to be built soon, with a store in connection, which is expected to attract tourists.

Items about the school, published in the sorority magazine, The Arrow, are contributed by Mrs. Pace under the picturesque heading of "Pigeon Creek News," and wherever Pi Phis gather you'll hear the institution discussed.

Chevy Chase Women Meet

Mrs. Charles B. Lingenfelter, chairman of public welfare, was in charge of the program of the civic section of the Women's Club of Chevy Chase, which met yesterday at the clubhouse. She presented as speakers Miss Lydia A. H. Berklin, of Friendship House; Miss Bertie Backus, principal of Alice Deal Junior High School, and Miss Ruth Bolton, executive secretary of the Social Service League of Montgomery County. Mrs. Arthur T. Davenport, chairman of the section, opened the meeting.

Miss Berklin emphasized need for a closer knowledge of social agencies and their work by people in a community. Friendship House is not functioning to its fullest capacity, she said, for want of greater support. There is no more urgent need anywhere than in Washington, she added, for the care of children while their mothers work, a service Friendship House affords.

Mrs. William E. Springer was tea hostess and Mrs. F. E. Espenchied and Miss Edith Garguilo poured.

Elks Campaign To Preserve U. S. Traditions

Americanization Nights Planned to Solidify National Customs

A Nation-wide program of the Order of Elks to perpetuate American traditions and keep this country out of the European war was described last night by Henry C. Warner, grand exalted rule of the fraternal organization.

Warner, attorney, of Dixon, Ill., told of the Elks' "purpose to keep the United States from participation in foreign dissensions."

Elks units throughout the country are holding a series of "Americanization nights" to solidify national customs and thus "indirectly" perpetuate this country's peace. Tonight, for example, 25,000 Cleveland Elks are expected to turn out to hear an address there by Representative Martin Dies.

Declaring the United States is the "land of opportunity," Warner asked, "Can we perpetuate that—it is worth perpetuating?"

In conjunction with its efforts to "stimulate Americanism and fight subversive influences" the national Elks organization is carrying on a gigantic charity drive, Warner said.

"Last year the Elks contributed over $1,500,000 to charities throughout the country," he asserted.

The money goes to various children's hospitals and institutions for the aged, such as the Old Peoples Home, of Bedford, Va., and the Elks' National Memorial Home, which was built as a monument to World War dead, in Chicago.

Warner attended a meeting of Washington Elks at the local headquarters, 919 H street northwest, after a dinner at the Mayflower. He will leave today or tomorrow to tour the South to further the principles of Americanism.

Race News Service Fights for Life as A 'Public Utility'

Chicago, Nov. 3 (AP).—The nationwide horse race information service, confronted by prospects of complete collapse, planned a court fight tonight in an effort to continue operations.

Weymouth Kirkland, attorney for the race news empire dominated by M. L. Annenberg, said he would seek an injunction against interference with the service on the grounds that it was a public utility.

He announced he would apply for the injunction some time before noon Monday—the hour set by the Illinois Bell Telephone Co. for terminating rental of its facilities to the Annenberg agencies. The Western Union Telegraph Co. joined the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. in deciding to take similar action next Thursday.

U. S. Reports Apple Purchases At 1,650,000 Bus.

The Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation reported yesterday it had purchased more than 1,650,000 bushels of surplus apples since the Government's buying program was started on October 6.

The apples are being distributed among families on relief, school children and welfare institutions.

The Government purchases have been made in California, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington and West Virginia.

Officials said the purchase program would be extended to other apple producing States. Prices paid have ranged from 50 to 75 cents a bushel.

Keystone Deplores 'Fix' Publicity

Publication of the names of persons fixing traffic tickets is hardly in keeping with the dignity of the District government, officials of the Keystone Automobile Club told the Commissioners yesterday.

George E. Keneipp, secretary of the club, said in some instances the practice may be fraught with injustice and embarrassment to well-meaning persons; or encourage more persons to apply for adjustments; or be construed as an unwarranted reflection on the Police Department.

Executor Acts On Blundon Will

Mrs. Francis A. Blundon and Attorney Louis C. Dismer, co-executor, asked the District Court yesterday for authority to administer the $155,000 estate left in Washington by Mrs. Blundon's husband, realty operator.

Mr. Blundon, who died at 72 on July 14 at his home in Silver Spring, also left a large estate in Maryland.

The Blundon property here includes seven residences in the northwest section, the Atlantic Apartments at 1305 Tenth street northwest, building and loan stock, bank deposits and receivable accounts.

Mr. Blundon's will ordered the apartment house divided among several relatives, gave Dismer, long an associate, an interest in the Blundon realty business, and bequeathed the bulk of the estate to Mrs. Blundon.

Georgians to Dance

The Georgia State Society will hold a "Harvest Ball" tonight from 9:30 to 1 a. m. at the Shoreham Hotel. The sponsors are daughters of Georgia members of Congress. Harry L. Brown, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture and president of the society, will head the receiving line.

Radio Workshop:

Central Pupils to Broadcast 'The Necklace' Skit Tonight

Style Flashes, Student-Teacher Quiz On Program at 6:15; Young Artists To Open Second Series by D. C. High School

Youthful radio artists from Central High School tonight will open the second season of the "Students' Radio Workshop" sponsored by station WJSV, the schools of the District, and The Washington Post.

Central High's program, from 6:15 p. m. to 6:45 (instead of the time previously announced), will mix poetry, drama, style flashes, and a pupil-professor interview.

Charlotte Davis, student writer, will read an original poem. A dramatic group will present a skit from Guy de Maupassant's short story, "The Necklace." Home Economics pupils will present the style flashes.

Jean Bryan, president of the school radio guild, will reserve the usual pupil-teacher role by quizzing Dr. A. V. Smith, of the biology staff. Irving Lieberman will be master of ceremonies.

Members of the cast for "The Necklace" include Bernard Harrison, Miss TheodoreCohen, Miss Dorothy Hurley, Edward Stern, Miss Janet Segal, and Joseph Cohen. Musical entertainment will be given by Mary Kekaris, Beth Franke, Elaine Zetlin and Jerenne Wann.

Mrs. Phronsie Marsh Filmer, director of radio activities at Central, said yesterday that after the first WJSV student broadcasts, she had seen increasing enthusiasm for radio among the pupils. Several pupils have chosen radio as their field of extracurricular work this year, Mrs. Filmer said.

Central High's program is the first of 20 to be staged by the 10 senior high schools.

Plan to Let D.C. Set Taxes Is Approved

Kitchen Cabinet for Six Items in Seal Formula to Revise District Government

Six of the 13 streamlined District departments proposed under the Seal plan for reorganization of the District government were approved yesterday by the Commissioners' "kitchen cabinet."

With minor changes the provisions were adopted exactly as proposed by the author, Corporation Counsel Seal. The departments are finance, law, public works (originally engineering), personnel, police and fire.

At the same time Seal made public his plans for enlarging the powers of the District Commissioners to give them authority to assess, collect and adjust taxes. Many additional powers, now restricted to Congress, would be delegated to the Commissioners under his plan.

The proposals to transfer the functions of the present Department of Vehicles and Traffic to the Police Department was modified by the group so that the engineering matters pertaining to traffic would be placed under the Department of Public Works. Under the same plan, the licensing functions would be transferred to the license department, and, as now, the enforcement of traffic to the police. One member voted to retain the present traffic department.

Works Director Included

In changing the name of the Engineering Department, the cabinet also provided for a new director of public works, who would operate under the Engineer Commissioner and would be placed over all phases of construction, inspection, highways, sanitary engineering, surveying and the office of the chief clerk.

Seal made no provision for this office, but he said he would go along with the recommendation of the other members. It was pointed out that the Commissioner now serves on the Board of Comissioners, is a member of the Zoning Commission, Park and Planning Commission, Public Utilities Commission and District Unemployment Compensation Board. The arguments against appointing an Assistant Engineer Commissioner to this post were based on the short term of that office.

Although the cabinet did not take up the other departments suggested by Seal, District Auditor Daniel J. Donovan, a member of the group, said he would oppose the return of the municipal hospitals to the welfare department. Richmond Keech, vice chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, and Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, the other members of the cabinet, made no comment on this recommendation.

The other departments which will be considered by the group at its next meeting Monday at 10 a. m. are health, license, insurance, corporation, labor, welfare and recreation. Of those in the plan only six departments are now in existence.

Power Listed

A digest of the powers provided the Commissioners under Seal's plan follows:

To prevent the coming into the District from beyond the limits of the District of persons having no ostensible means of support who may be dangerous to the peace and safety of the District, and for this purpose may require the captain or master of any vessel or the conductor of any train bringing such passengers into the District to enter bond with satisfactory security that such persons shall not become chargeable to the District, and may compel such captain, master or conductor to take them whence they came.

Make and adopt regulations concerning control and management of fiscal and municipal affairs and property belonging to the District.

Power to grant pardons.

To carry out its powers for government and good order, by license, regulation, suppression, borrowing, tax levy, fixing of license fees, revocation of licenses and other necessary and convenient means and may provide penalties of fines, imprisonment or confiscation.

To name or rename any street, avenue, alley or other public place in the District.

Erect and keep in order public buildings necessary or proper to the District.

Restrain and punish vagrants and mendicants.

Compromise and settle claims.

Obtain and install parking meters.

To perform as governmental functions such local public services as in the discretion of the commissioners are advisable for the promotion of the health, comfort, safety, convenience and general welfare of the inhabitants of the District.

Maryland Rules Envoys Must Pay State Gas Taxes

Baltimore, Nov. 3 (AP).—State Department credentials notwithstanding, diplomats must pay gasoline taxes in Maryland, a ruling by Attorney General William C. Walsh said today.

Walsh, in an opinion sent to Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor, held that certificates and identification cards which Secretary of State Hull proposes to issue to foreign diplomatic officers should not be honored.

The credentials would entitle their holders to gas tax rebates.

Walsh asserted diplomats were not entitled to exemption from various taxes unless such exemption was specifically provided for in treaties between the United States and nations they represent.

Two Children, Famous as Puppy Handlers, Make Bows as Judges Today in Alexandria

Miss Gene Scaggs and Louis Cornet to Act In Youngsters' Class

Two children who have won prizes up and down the country for their prowess in handling puppies will make their first bow as judges of puppy handling today at the Old Dominion Kennel Club puppy match at the Alexandria Armory.

They are Miss Gene Scaggs, 13, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Scaggs, of Upper Marlboro, Md., and Louis Cornet, 13, son of Dr. and Mrs. L. A. Cornet, of 1927 North Capitol street. Gene will judge the girls and Louis the boys.

Childrens classes are not common at puppy shows, Mrs. Scaggs said yesterday, but Gene has won prizes and even on occasion defeated her parents at all-breed, American Kennel Club shows of the Old Dominion Club, while Louis, also a frequent prize-winner, has had the rare honor of showing at the Madison Square Garden in New York.

The idea of letting children judge children has probably never been tried before, Mrs. Scaggs said. Gene and Louis will have to forget about the pups when they judge, and watch the child on the other end of the leash, to see how well the pup is made to keep in line and do as he is bid.

"So a child may win the trophy with the worst dog in the show, if he handles it properly," said Mrs. Scaggs. "But I am afraid the judges are going to be very strict, probably more so than their elders would be."

The armory will open for the show at 6 p. m., but the judging will start at 7. Classes are for puppies from three to six months, six to nine, and nine to twelve. The club estimates that at least four adults will be necessary to accompany each child and his puppy. Chairman of the match is Mrs. Cornet.

State to Speed 13 Primary Road Projects, O'Conor Says

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Nov. 3.—Expedited construction before next June 30 will thaw $1,018,447 of $3,000,000 in Federal aid road funds now frozen by failure of the State to proceed with highway projects, Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor said today.

O'Conor said the State will not lose any of the impounded funds, and will have a better integrated roads system for taking time to correlate the construction program before rushing to get Federal funds.

Reorganization of the State Roads Commission along lines suggested by Chairman Ezra B. Whitman and approved by the board of public works last week will bring 13 primary, five secondary and three grade-crossing-elimination projects under contract by June 30, to release the Federal funds, O'Conor said.

"The board approved Mr. Whitman's suggested reorganization," O'Conor said. "We are going to insist on an expedited construction performance, and I am certain the State will get it. Results are already apparent."

O'Conor pointed out that the weekly progress report submitted by Whitman showed five of the 13 primary road projects would be under contract by January 31. Seven of the remaining eight will be under contract by June 30.

There is some doubt that the proposed Wilkens avenue extension to connect with Washington boulevard can be planned and readied for inclusion in fiscal 1939 Federal grants.

One of the five secondary roads contracts has been let and the other four will be under contract in 60 days, O'Conor said.

The Western Maryland Railway grade elimination project at Hagerstown is under construction. Three others, the Norfolk & Western crossing at Antietam, the Pennsylvania railway crossing at Red Mill, the Baltimore & Ohio crossing at Leslie, will be under way by January 1.

O'Conor said construction must be started by June 30 to share in fiscal 1939 benefits.

Whitman reported the primary roads projects which will be under way by January 31 are the $15,000 landscaping of the Philadelphia road from Winters Run to Otter Creek, the Antietam grade crossing elimination approaches, the Philadelphia road from Little Elk Creek to Landing Road, the grade crossing elimination at Leslie, Cecil County, and the Solomons Island road.

Randle Citizens Protest Brick For Armory

Cast Concrete Urged Like That Used at Naval Testing Basin

Opposition was expressed yesterday by Randle Highlands Citizens' Association to the proposed use of brick in construction of the new District National Guard Armory at the end of East Capitol street.

President Adelbert W. Lee said other citizens' associations in East Washington joined in the protest and urged use of white stone in the edifice.

He asked that cast concrete, used at the Naval Testing Basin, Carderock, Md., be used for the armory.

Cast concrete, he added, would cost only $40,000 more than brick.

A campaign to obtain the sum by popular subscription "to preserve the beauty of this section" is under consideration, Lee said.

Thanksgiving Day For Postmen to Be President's

Postmen are going to have their Thanksgiving this year the way the President wants it—if the communities they serve will allow it.

An order went out to all postoffices from First Assistant Postmaster General Howes yesterday, notifying them that November 23 would be the legal Thanksgiving Day for postal employes.

But Howes recognized that people in some places are going to eat their turkeys on the traditional Thursday, and want a working day's mail service on the 23d. In such cases "necessary" postal service should be rendered, he advised, and the men who render it should be given another day off.

U. S. to Protect Aleutian Preserve

An enlarged protection program for native birds and fur animals on the 3,000,000-acre Aleutian Islands wild life refuge in Alaska is announced by the Department of the Interior.

The blue fox industry, annually yielding about 3,000 pelts, valued at $100,000, will be required to operate so as to avoid destruction of certain important birds; native birds will be studied and attempts made to prevent their extermination; and natives "will be given the means to achieve economic independence," it was said.

Distributers Back Cut Rate Relief Milk

Dairies Indicate Approval of Move For Market Accord For Capital Area

Distributers and a consumers group yesterday indorsed the proposal of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association to provide milk to relief families at a substantially lower cost than the 14-cent price now charged for home delivery.

The dairies also indicated they would not oppose the request of the producers for a marketing agreement and Agriculture Department order to fix the minimum prices paid farmers to stabilize the industry and discourage "bootlegging."

The Surplus Commodities Corporation was understood to have assured representatives of the Maryland-Virginia Association that it would cooperate in a program to sell milk to relief families by subsidizing the project.

Might Be 8 or 9 Cents

B. B. Derrick, secretary-manager of the association, estimated that the special price to relief families might be as low as 8 or 9 cents providing dairies take a share of the cut. He said extra milk sales might run as high as 1,000 gallons a day.

District relief officials said that they have no money to purchase milk at any price for distribution among the needy although they sympathized with the plan.

The producers' plan does not contemplate making the special price available to WPA workers, it was said, or other low-income families, but only to persons actually on direct relief rolls.

A resolution asking the District commissioners to encourage the consumption of milk among low-income families and indorsing the combined move of the Agriculture Department and the Maryland-Virginia Producers to sell milk to the needy at a lower price was adopted by the Consumers Milk Committee, of which Mrs. Simon M. Newman is chairman.

Fuehrer Method Solves Nothing, Rabbi Metz Says

No fuehrer's militaristic methods can ever hope to solve any problems of society, Rabbi Solomon H. Metz last night told a large congregation at Adas Israel Synagogue.

The fuehrer method destroys the very thing it attempts to remedy, said the speaker, contending that fuehrers eventually resort to war to preserve their power.

Rabbi Metz said America must have not only a political and social democracy, but also an economic democracy. The true spirit of democracy cannot express itself in individualism, but in collectivism, he said.

'The Roaring Twenties,' It Seems, Really Roared

New Cagney-Lane Starrer, at the Earle, Re-creates a Vivid and Violent Era; Three-Star Stage Bill Is Smash Hit

"THE ROARING TWENTIES." Warner Brothers picturization of a story by Mark Hellinger, adapted to the screen by Jerry Wald, Richard Macauley and Robert Rossen, costarring James Cagney and Priscilla Lane, with Humphrey Bogart, Gladys George, Jeffrey Lynn, Frank McHugh, Paul Kelly, Elisabeth Risdon, Ed Keane, Joe Sawyer, Joseph Crehan, George Meeker, John Hamilton, Robert Elliott, Eddie Chandler, Max Wagner and Vera Lewis. Directed by Raoul Walsh. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Earle Theater.

JUST AS "Hollywood Cavalcade" chronicles the beginning and subsequent development of the cinema as a major source of mass entertainment, so does "The Roaring Twenties," which opened yesterday on the screen at the Earle Theater, depict the genesis and growth of bootlegging, the speakeasy, gangsterism and all of the other wild and lawless factors that precipitated one of the most amazing chapters of America's internal history.

BELL

Unlike so many similar films that have preceded it, "The Roaring Twenties" does not pretend to be unimpeachably fictitious. In his foreword, Mark Hellinger, author of the original story upon which the film is based, states that the incidents comprising the plot are actual and the characters in the play composites of notorious figures who really lived during the period of prohibition and social outlawry. Many of them—both situations and persons of the drama—are easily recognizable.

The action is initiated on the battlefields of France in 1918, when three doughboys find shelter in the same shell hole. One is a former garage mechanic, another a saloonkeeper and the third a young law graduate, who has dreams of a remunerative practice and offices overlooking all of New York City from the twenty-eighth floor of a midtown skyscraper. They plan to resume their former callings, when, as and if the war ever ends. It ends just about then. Returning home, they make the discovery that so many of the A. E. F. made—that those glib promises that their jobs would be waiting for them when they got back was nothing more than a large dose of old malarky.

With the Volstead Act in full force but small effect, they make the discovery also that there are quick and mighty fortunes to be made in violation of two Federal statutes that only a portion of the population wanted and practically none of it supports. Their illicit traffic began with bathtub gin and grew to encompass the hijacking of whole ships' cargoes of contraband liquor at sea, the robbery of government warehouses, murder, mayhem, property destruction and all of the other forms of highbinding that prevailed during the period with which the action deals.

The quick transition of the furtive and fearful speakeasy into the opulent and "protected" night club is pictured as a corollary of all this gun-made lawlessness and disorder. It is from this aspect of Mr. Hellinger's turbulent story that the film's romantic interest is drawn. The rivalry betwen the one-time gangeman and the young lawyer, who becomes his mouthpiece, for the favor of Jean Sherman, the girl who had "done her bit" by writing regular letters to the boys in the trenches and blossomed finally into a night club singer, provides the motivation for the love story traced against a sinister and bloody background.

Into the warp and woof of this reminiscent narrative has been woven all of the violence that characterized the era of uncurbed gangsterism. It is pretty strong meat a good deal of the time, but it is unfailingly interesting, exciting and expertly executed. There is a bit of a thrill in hearing many of the old song hits revived and in the recreation of the hectic activities that comprised Manhattan's night life for an explosive and deeply incarnadined decade.

Is Perfectly Cast

With James Cagney, Humphrey Bogart, Paul Kelly and Jeffrey Lynn cast in the major male roles and Priscilla Lane and Gladys George in the two feminine characters of prime importance, there could be no improvement in the exposition of the melodrama's primary thesis. Cagney, the renegade hero of the piece, is in top form and Bogart and Kelly provide perfect foils for his relentless enterprises as one of the town's "big shots" and its most unworthy suitor for the hand of the night club girl who preferred the young lawyer for whom the going eventually got too hot.

Miss George's part is less a composite of many peroxide figures of the times than it is a more or less accurate portrait of Texas Guinan—even to the suggestion of the character name, "Panama Smith." The comedy burden of the play devolves upon Frank McHugh, as the taxi driver, who didn't get over to the other side, but stayed home and hung onto a jallopy that grew into a business of 2,000 cabs as a "front" for his pal's fabulous business of peddling bogus booze to befuddled buyers. It was, as I have said, an opulent racket—so opulent that nobody in the picture bothers with anything so plebeian as needled beer.

Harry Anger's star-studded diversion at the Earle this week furnishes a nice antidote for the sordidness and carnage of the picture. Jack Haley, Mary Carlisle and Jack Teagarden's orchestra, individually and collectively, were a smash hit yesterday afternoon in the discriminating estimation of overflow crowds at two performances that overlapped under the eyes of your reporter.

Stage Acts All Click

Mr. Haley, no novice at this stage business, monologues, sings and kids his way through a long interval on the rostrom that seems too short, and Miss Carlisle, making her first visit to the capital in several years, chattered back and sang with no less immediate and telling effect. It all seems to depend on whether you have something to do and know how to do it.

The Teagarden Orchestra is a lusty group of "jam session" experts who make their instruments do all manner of strange and wonderful things, interspersing their more riotous numbers with gentler melodies no less skillfully interpreted—like "Blue Orchids," if you must have an example. They toss in Roberts and Martin, champion jitterbugs, and Tiny Ann and Tony Small, ditto, for good measure and a bit of grotesque travesty. Tiny Ann is a towering young woman and Tony Small smartly named. Howard Nichols also has his moment in the spotlight as a dancing juggler who does—extraordinary things with an unbelievable number of hoops.

An Edgar Bergen-Charlie McCarthy comedy short turns out to be a plea for the Community Chest—and one of the best that ever has come along—and a new issue of the Paramount News adds further relief from the tension of a tightly wound feature that all but blasts the audience into the aisles.

A Couple of the 'Big Shots' Talk It Over

as they appear in the roles of Eddie Bartlett and Nick Brown, masters of New York's "gin trade" and "wine customers," respectively, in the old bootlegging days so realistically depicted in "The Roaring Twenties," the screen attraction which opened at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater yesterday. The principal feminine roles are portrayed by Priscilla Lane, costarred with Mr. Cagney, and Gladys George

Adolf Hitler: Clare Boothe wanted to use recordings of some of your anti-Red broadcasts in one of the scenes of her new play, "Margin for Error." She discovered that for theater purposes you don't scream loud enough—and so an impersonator was hired . . . Artie Shaw: Benny Goodman will use his day off this Sunday by flying to Buffalo to be the guest artist with the Philharmonic there. He'll play the Mozart Concerto for Clarinet.

NEWSPAPER GUILD: Britain's most hallowed newspaper tradition was violated last week and almost caused an eruption along Fleet street . . . The London Times, in reporting Hitler's strange diet of eggs, broke precedent by permitting a pun to appear in the caption. The Times revolutionary headline for this diet story was: "How Hitler Is Egged On."

ALEC WOOLLCOTT: Both Helen Hayes, who opened in "Ladies and Gentlemen," and Monte Woolley, who opened in "The Man Who Came to Dinner," sent out their acknowledgments-for-good-wishes wires on the same day. The veteran Miss Hayes sent her acknowledgments in pencil, on plain stationery. Monte's acknowledgments were formal ones—on engraved cards . . . Tony Canzoneri: Your wife vowed last night after you were kayoed that you positively have fought your last fight . . . Gov. Lehman: This week's rain solved a crisis at Rockland State Hospital. There had been a water shortage, and they were about to call for help.

ELMER RICE: Keenan Wynn, son of Ed Wynn, has a role in your Playwrights' production of the new George M. Cohan show . . . Cohan watched him rehearse and then said: "Young man, you've got a great career ahead of you, but I want to warn you of one thing. Never get a swelled head" . . . Keenan went home and told this to his father . . . "When I was 17," Wynn then related to his son, "I was guest of honor at the Green Room. A new star named George M. Cohan watched me work, took me aside and said: 'Young man, you've got a great career ahead of you, but I want to warn you of one thing. Never get a swelled head'."

MAXIE ROSENBLOOM: Bob Olin, who followed you as light-heavyweight champion, will follow you into the entertainment field. He'll appear in a new play, "Caribbean Cruise" . . . Lew Brown: Natalie Wynn of your "Yokel Boy" show has all her dough invested in scrap iron . . . Lepke: Don't try to poker-face United States Attorney Cahill. In the waiting room of Cahill's office is displayed but one book—"How to Read Character From the Human Face."

JIM FARLEY: Argentina, confident that you won't do anything to hurt Latin-American relations, is using your mails to invite New Yorkers to buy lottery tickets. One ticket sells for $96.40—for a million-dollar first prize.

DAVID DUBINSKY: Robert Gordon, who is staging the revised edition of "Pins & Needles," once worked under the famed Russian director, Boleslawsky, in "The Scarlet Letter." He had but one line—muttering "Make way, make way for Hester Prynne" . . . Gordon was directed to rehearse that one line for 12 hours before a mirror—because Boleslawsky insisted: "I want to get the dull, glazed look of eternity in your eyes."

Capra Hit Is Continuing at Metropolitan

'Mr. Smith' Goes Into Third Midcity Week of Popularity

Certainly the most volubly discussed film of the season, "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," yesterday changed houses with none of that diminution in rank which such a move would incur on the Hill. "Mr. Smith" is now at the Metropolitan after two weeks at the Earle, still an unsullied Senator, still a starry-eyed idealist and still something of a dope.

Frank Capra's latest film has stirred up the most intense partisanships. Criticism of the film's mealy-mouthed tribute to democracy is thought by some to betray an insidious influence. But Mr. Capra has pushed Jimmy Stewart's likable young Senator into such a den of iniquity on his arrival in Washington, has made all of the newspapermen within the camera's range so weak-kneed, all of the Senators so shallow, that it is the duty of us who know something of our neighbors' integrity to shout "'Taint So" when some of our colleagues in the hinterlands proclaim this a "true masterpiece."

Entertainment, But Not Fact

Perhaps this is taking the Capra comedy too seriously. Perhaps this is too late a date for such a criticism of a film that is so understandably breaking Nation-wide records. Perhaps it is being unduly discriminating about a picture which shows so much of the workings of Government that would otherwise only be learned by study. But, as has been pointed out, it is that sort of film which makes one feel strongly either one way or the other.

The top-notch cast, supporting genial Stewart in the title role, includes Jean Arthur, his bright secretary; Thomas Mitchell, an inbibing reporter; Claude Rains, a compromising solon; Edward Arnold, the ruthless political boss, and Guy Kibbe, Eugene Pallette, H. B. Warner, Astrid Allwyn and Beulah Bondi in other roles of importance.

A "Porky" cartoon and the latest newsreels support a film which demands the personal scrutiny of all those who would know what the shootin's all about. R. L. C.

'Brother Orchid'

It is not hard to see what attracted Warner Brothers to a first play by a Catholic University undergraduate. The young playwright is Leo Brady and his play, "Brother Orchid," has been performed the last three evenings by the Blackfriars Guild at St. Paul's auditorium.

Mr. Brady has dropped a gang leader, a chap at home in Alcatraz, into the monastery of the Brothers of the Flowers. Johnny Sarto landed there quite by chance when the ride on which he was taken had a return-trip ticket after all. Badly wounded, he is nursed back to health by the brothers who, because their order was founded to spread courage and beauty of flowers, call themselves after their plant. Johnny likes his hideaway, becomes one of the order and calls himself Brother Orchid. When his old gang clamps down on the flower "racket," which earns the brothers their daily bread, Brother Orchid reverts to the ways of the world as he knew it, but not for his own sake.

Surely this is a novel idea and Mr. Brady has handled it cleverly, so cleverly that the film company has purchased it as an Edward G. Robinson vehicle. Adapted from a Colliers short story, by Richard Connell, the play has also been performed this month by Syracuse University, with Broadway's Eddie Dowling in the leading role.

The play's faults can be remedied. There is too much philosophical talk for the benefit of entertainment. When the central plot is followed, the play boasts an originality that is thoroughly entertaining.

The Rev. Gilbert V. Hartke's direction was generally to the point, and Anthony G. Messuri's Brother Orchid was an understandably jittery fellow. Edward Arliss brought fine dignity to Abbott Jonquil, while William Leggate's scene with Messuri on the value of his new life was well projected despite its excessive talkiness.

William Draper, George Evans, William A. Coleman, Edgar Ford, Raymond Maryman, Robert Coren, Victor Orsinger and Richard V. Boulger completed the all-male cast. R. L. C.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Nov. 3 (INS).—With Sam Goldwyn and Warners practically at each other's throats over who would get Zorina for her next picture, Darryl Zanuck, a dark horse, comes up with a contract to star her in "European Plan." Of course, Darryl had to get Sam's "by your leave" first, since Zorina is still under contract to the U. A. producer.

LOUELLA PARSONS

After finishing "On Your Toes," for Warners, Zorina left for New York with her husband, George Balanchine. She was all set to star in a Dwight Deere Wiman show written by Rodgers, Hart and George Abbott, when she exercised a lady's prerogative and changed her mind. Perhaps I should say the script of the new Twentieth Century-Fox picture changed her mind, for "European Plan" has a perfect role for a dancer. This yarn, by Milton Lazarus and Manny Seff, was first mentioned for Sonja Henie, but since it is all about a ballet dancer and not an ice skater, it's better for Zorina. Harry Joe Brown will produce.

Not many consultants come to Hollywood without accepting a cent of salary for their expert opinions. But Heber J. Grant, venerable president of the Mormon Church, established this unusual precedent when he informed Darryl Zanuck that his chief concern with the filming of Brigham Young's life is to see that they do justice to the Mormon leader an' that the details are correct. Otto Brower and a second unit, accompanied by Mr. Grant, left by special train a few days ago for Cedar City, Utah, to begin filming the backgrounds in Strawberry Valley for Twentieth Century-Fox—and you can rest assured when this particular biography comes to the screen there will be no license taken.

I'll have to admit I never thought Jane Bryan would ever set the world on fire until I saw her in "The Old Maid," with Bette Davis and Miriam Hopkins. Holding her own with these top troupers, Jane caused a lot of people to change their minds. It led to her getting the part of the tragic little dancer opposite Paul Muni in "We Are Not Alone" and now she's selected for the second femme part to Merle Oberon's in "We Shall Meet Again."

Very few people in Hollywood know Jane very well because she seldom goes night clubbing or to other movie haunts. The most important thing in her life is her work—and Eddie Albert, whom she is expected to marry any day now.

Chatter in Hollywood: Whatever Mae West uses for a diet, it is efficacious. She is now as slim as she was when she made her first picture with George Raft at Para and registered so well that she was at once made a star. Dressed in a slinky blue gown, "Diamond Mae" and Bill Fields were acting like buddies on the set this week and agreeing on every scene. For the first time in the history of a West picture, they have a complete script which is actually being followed (except when Bill tears off a particularly hilarious ad lib.). Bill, who is a happy man since he won his lawsuit for medical services, is moving out to Bel Air and will shortly become a neighbor of C. B. De Mille in the Los Feliz district.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Eleanor Powell's daily telephone call these days is from Carl Rivazzi, San Francisco orchestra leader; Johnny Weissmuller and his bride, Mrs. Tarzan, return to their Hollywood home tomorrow; Joan Crawford is still sick with a bad case of flu; Aunt Cissy's birthday present from Freddie is a pair of bathroom scales because he thinks she has put on too much weight; Edgar Bergen is a hero to Post No. 8 of the American Legion. He took time out of his busy life to introduce Charlie McCarthy to the Legion boys.

Adrian and Jane Gaynor, who seem very, very happy, are giving a small dinner tomorrow night to which Ann Sothern, Roger Pryor, Jerry Asher and a few other close friends have been invited; Franchot Tone, whose health has been none too good since his operation in New York, will sun himself at Palm Springs over the week end; proud movie parents will attend Alexander Warshawsky's exhibit of children's paintings Sunday at the Walker Gallery; Dolly Haas and Eddie Buzzell talking business at the Lamaze. Another pair of diners talking shop were Merle Oberon and her manager, Myron Selznick.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Much Sea Action

Approximately 40 per cent of the footage of "Rulers of the Sea," new Frank Lloyd production starring Douglas Fairbanks, jr., Margaret Lockwood and Will Fyffe, will be sea shots dramatizing the first all-steam crossing of the Atlantic by the paddle steamer, Dog Star, in 1838.

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Nov. 3

It's fun to appear on the screen guild show. Never again will I listen when people tell me actors are not courteous. Not only Ralph Morgan head of the guild, but Jean Hersholt head of Relief fund, and Conrad Nagel were there before and after the show to give us a word of encouragement and a pat on the back. When they thanked Charles Laughton for consenting to go on next week, he said: "Thank me? I'm thanking you. It's every actor's duty." And that's the way we feel. They make it a pleasure. Jean Hersholt was just back from Minneapolis where he went for opening of the community chest and they wired him their quota was 35 per cent over last year. Opera stars have offered their services to the guild show—Flagstad, Melchior—and mind, they have nothing to do with pictures. I went into a relief meeting the other night and it was an eye opener to see the present stars working for those not so fortunate. Believe me, it gave me plenty to think about. And did you know when Clark Gable goes on the air he always asks for Paula Winslow to play opposite him? Insists upon her part being built up and that she gets billing. If our producers only knew it, they've got a brand new comedienne in Barbara Jo Allen, who's Vera Vague on that coffee show. She's wonderful—writes her own stuff, is pretty and smart. And here all the time I thought she was a woman flirting with 50!

HOPPER

The other night when Rosa Ponselle was singing in her own garden she looked up and, there was a girl hanging over the wall. It was Joan Crawford, who lives across the road, heard the music and came to get an earful.

Word seeps back from the Howard-Leeds wedding that Billy Seymour, who sold him that engagement ring, almost got the happy couple into a jam with the candid boys. He stepped out of his official capacity and got pretty arrogant, until a member of the Howard family stepped in and moothed out the situation . . . And did you know that "Daisy" the dog who plays in "Blondie" also worked in "The Women" and while her name is Daisy, she belongs to the other sex. And when Arthur Lake's eight month old niece started saying "ga-ga" its grandma nearly burst with pride, 'til the colored maid walked into the room, and the baby said "ga-ga" to her, too.

Metro is certainly lucky—when Clark Gable goes to Atlanta for the opening of "Gone" Carole will mosey along. And Gov. Bricker of Ohio has paged him to be King of Rubber at their annual ball, December 2d. He hasn't said yes—he hasn't said no; but if his tractor needs new tires, he'll probably go.

Liz Whitney is selling so many of her blooded horses at Upperville, looks as though she's preparing to come to Hollywood for keeps. Don't tell me that Jackie Cooper has swiped his bosses girl. He's been seen quite a bit lately with Peggy Moran, and we thought she was the apple in Joe Pasternak's eye . . . Another new romance is on between Nancy Kelly and Ken Murray; or is it because she likes those gold bands he puts around her finger—even if they do come off a cigar?

Now that Gabriel Pascal's option has expired on the Amelia Earhart story, wouldn't it be a natural follow-up for Hepburn, after she finishes "Philadelphia Story" at Metro? And I'm predicting now that she'll have more success at that studio than she's ever had before in pictures . . . That's good luck for women over there. "Yes," and called out Spencer Tracy, "it hasn't been bad luck for me, either."

Late G. W. Rally Fails, Clemson Wins, 13 to 6

The Washington Post Sports

*X WASHINGTON: SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1939 17

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Twenty-six years ago this week, West Point's football team scheduled a "breather" in preparation for its big November games. And late that afternoon when the sun set on the Hudson, the events had been no less than breath-taking. Army was nursing a 32-13 defeat and a new football power was born.

POVICH

Unheralded, the first great Notre Dame team had come to the Hudson plains, bringing to the East a new-fangled weapon called the touchdown pass and two 60-minute football players who knew how to execute it. One was a diminutive quarterback named Gus Dorais who threw the passes, and the other was a stocky end with a bashed-in nose, a Scandinavian lad by the name of Knute Rockne.

All afternoon Dorais threw his passes and most of the afternoon Rockne caught 'em. Notre Dame was featuring the pass not as a mere ground-gaining weapon used sparingly by Eastern colleges, but as a touchdown-getter. Dorais didn't trifle with short throws. He was rifling the ball far down field and the fleet Rockne, outsprinting the Army secondary defense, was catching it. Army surrendered five touchdowns to that combination.

They are meeting again this afternoon—Army vs. Notre Dame at Yankee Stadium—and only the influential person has been able to obtain a ticket for the past week. It's the East's biggest football game with the exception of Army vs. Navy, and 75,000 will jam-pack the stadium. Back there in 1913, the hardy little band from South Bend, Ind., started something.

'Rock's' Boys Carried on the Tradition

Knute Rockne graduated from the Notre Dame varsity to the coaching profession and succeeded Jess Harpster as head coach of his alma mater. It was meet and proper also, that the great little quarterback, Dorais, should become a coach. At the University of Detroit, Dorais has achieved none of the fame that was Rockne's at Notre Dame, but Dorais-coached teams are underrated only to the grief of the opposition.

In 1932, Rockne plummeted to his death in an airliner caught in a furious Kansas storm but men he coached at Notre Dame have since upheld the traditions of Irish teams, though not in the same remarkable degree. First Hunk Anderson and then Elmer Layden took over at South Bend and, as firm disciples of the Rockne system perpetuated Notre Dame as a football power.

Speaking of football powers that did not endure, it is easy to recall the Carlisle Indians. In fact, on the same afternoon that Notre Dame was first achieving fame by beating Army in 1913, the Carlisle Indian School, coached by Pop Warner, was beating Georgetown in Washington by a score of 34 to 0.

Warner Featured His Tricky Formations

The fact that the best football player on the field that day was Georgetown's Harry Costello did not make much difference in the score. Costello reeled off lengthy gains but could never break away for a touchdown, and only the fact that he was a superb safety man averted another half-dozen Carlisle touchdowns. Joe Guyon and Gus Welch were running wild for Carlisle. Jim Thorp wasn't with Carlisle that season.

The wily Warner was even then featuring his tricky double wingback formations. The fleetness of his Indians enabled them to outsprint the Georgetowns on deep reverses and criss-cross plays. Carlisle was the most feared name in football in that era, but the Government abandoned the Indian School during the war and Warner moved on to Pitt, thence to Southern California, thence to Temple and now to San Jose State, in California.

Warner and Rockne—their systems of football have become the Bibles of the coaching profession. Warner football, with its reverses and single and double wing formations and power plays, is perhaps the most widely used football system in the country, but Rockne disciples are no less emphatic in their chocie. Endlessly they will argue for Rockne precision, the indirect pass and "T" and box formations.

Demanded a Full 60-Minute Lesson

Notre Dame football has not maintained the same high level since Rockne's death, but it has been efficient enough to prove a nightmare to Army teams. Not since 1931, has a West Point eleven defeated the Irish, although Army did manage to gain one tie during that span.

It was Notre Dame-Army rivalry which gave to football one of its choicest stories, incidentally. It was the occasion when a Rockne team was scoring a one-sided victory and, as the story goes, Rockne offered to shorten the time of the last two quarters in a face-saving gesture for Army. Whereupon the Army coach shook his head emphatically:

"Nothing doing, Rock," he said. "You won't shorten the last half on us. We're giving you a big guarantee for this game and we want a full 60-minute lesson."

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Nov. 3.—(Note: Notre Dame long since has replaced Yale as the college of the man in the street. And nowhere, not even in South Bend, are there more rabid Notre Dame supporters than in New York—some thousand miles from the campus. Not even the great advance of pro football, which has detracted the attention of the average schoolless fan from the college game, has quite lured the faithful "old grads" out of Notre Dame's Curbstone Alumni Association.)

CONSIDINE

JOE (Leaning against the front wall of Lindy's)—Hey, you, I seen you last year when we played Army, didn't I?

DOAKES (A parked cab-driver, looking up from his racing form)—Hello, hot-shot. Yeah, we set next together, and got in the fight with that bum who liked Army.

JOE—What d'ya think of them dopes, them sportswriters, saying we're lucky this year—just because we been winning by a nose?

DOAKES—What do they know? Nothin'. I bet they don't know who trun the passes to Ka-nute Rockne the first time we beat Army.

JOE (Embarrassed)—I wasn't around here in 1913 to see that. I was just a punk kid in reform school when we win that one. I didn't jern the alumuses until the year Jack Elder run wild.

DOAKES—Yale was my school then, so I didn't see it neither. But they's a lot of we alumnuses who seen it. Did you ever hear that we stayed over at West Point for a day or two, to teach 'em how to trun that ball like Dorais could.

JOE—Yeah, that's the kin'a spirit we got. But we won't be staying over this week-end. They gettin' cocky again and think they're gonna win. We'll put 'em in their place.

DOAKES (Scowling at a would-be pasenger who tried to enter the cab)—Scram, y'bum. Where was I, pal? Oh, yeah, I'm worried about Bud Kerr, our left end, and our tackle, Tom Gallagher, and Tad Harvey our other tackle. We might miss 'em.

JOE—Hah! That's hot. I think our coach just put out that story because he was afraid them Cadets wouldn' show up if we were at full strength. He ain't so dumb, our guy ain't.

DOAKES—You're tellin' me! We got the greatest coach in the world. When Rock died I tole a friend of mine who is an alumnus, the best little street cleaner on Sixth avenue. I tole him "we're sunk." Well, you know how we all suffered when Hunk Anderson was in there, and we was blowing games like that 12-0 one to the Army in 1931. So I got to looking around for one of Rock's old boys and when I saw what Elmer was doing at Duquesne I knew he was the guy for the job.

JOE—He's done great. I like the way we're backing him up at the university, too. I mean fellows like Father O'Donnell—right in there punchin' for Elmer.

DOAKES (Still worried about the Irish injuries)—I think we oughta drop Carnegie Tech from the schedule. Them bums must use gimmicks. Our guy Lou Zontini's got a bum shoulder; Milt Piepul's got a bum leg, and somebody twisted Bob Saggau's laig, and they say Johnny McIntyre got his nose busted.

JOE (Ignoring three cuties)—We're tough too, ast them Cadets. We beat 'em the way it hurts most . . . 7-0, 7-6, 13-12, 12-6, and like that. We let 'em get close, and then—boffo.

DOAKES—Who are these Tennessee bums I been reading about? From the way some of them sportswriting tramps write you'd think they was as good as us. Who'd they ever beat?

JOE—I dunno. I don't follow them amachoors. But if anybody wrote that they're as good as us, they must be nuts. We're going to bust through Army, Iowa, Northwestern and Southern Cal. so fast nobody in their right sense is going to say any of them other bums is better.

DOAKES—Where you gonna set?

JOE—I'm settin' in standing room this year. There ain't a ticket left in New York. What do you say we go out to the Yankee Stadium on the special train—the subway we alumnuses always use.

DOAKES (Prodded by a cop to move along)—Okay, pal, and if I miss you there I'll see you when we make a rush for them disappearing goal posts after we lick them soldiers.

Another thrilling chapter was indelibly inscribed in the gridiron rivalry between Central and McKinley Highs yesterday at the Mount Pleasant bowl, as the Blue and White defendants overcame a 7-3 deficit midway of the final quarter to score an impressive 17-7 victory.

More than 6,000 fans jammed the concrete semi-circle to see Sam Di Blassi, Central's angular wingman, grab a 37-yard aerial and race the remaining 12 yards to the touchdown that broke Tech's heart and spirit and lead to the victory.

With the triumph Central brought the count in the 37 years of the rivalry's history to 16 victories for each team, five of the games having ended in ties.

Whatever else may be said for the game, probably the most exciting engagement between the two clubs, Tech took credit for having given the heavily favored Centralites the scare of their lives. Until Di Blasi snatched up that aerial from the rifle-like arm of Benny Steiner, Tech was very much in the game. It coasted along with only a 3-0 score against it for three quarters, and capitalized on a plunge by Jack Walsh on the first play of the final period to take its 7-3 edge.

Then, after one of the cruelest hoaxes of the season, its defense

2,000 Jayhawk Fans Battle Wildcats After 27-6 Defeat

By the Associated Press

Lawrence, Kans., Nov. 3.—Kansas made its best defensive stand after the game today as approximately 2,000 Jayhawk students repulsed attempts by Kansas State sympathizers to uproot the goal posts following the Wildcats' 27-to-6 triumph in a Big Six Conference clash.

The gladiators surged up and down the field with flying fists more numerous than ants at a picnic, and 20 minutes after the gun the 18,000 noncombatant spectators were still cheering the spectacle.

Innocent bystanders were brought down by flying blocks, band instruments trampled and noses smashed in the melee, which edged its way up Mount Oread, with the goal posts still upright.

Overshadows Game Itself

The post-game activities overshadowed the game itself, in which Kansas State relentlessly hammered a threadbare Jayhawk line and, when necessity demanded, unveiled an aerial attack that brought yardage and points. Kansas State won and Kansas retained the goal posts, but it was Ralph Miller, injured Jayhawk halfback, who starred in the game's most dramatic half-minute.

The invading Wildcats already had 13 points when the lad who underwent a knee operation in September entered the game. As icily calm as an Arctic midnight he tossed 24 yards to Mill Sullivant in the end zone but the leather trickled to the ground. Undismayed, Miller faded back to the Kansas State 40 on the next formation and let go again. This time Jake Fry was in the end zone and this time the play netted 6 points. With the drive ended, Miller simply turned and limped to the bench. He was in the game only 27 seconds.

Aggie Score Called Back

Seven plays after the opening kickoff Kansas State crossed the Kansas goal line on a play that gained 55 yards. Officials ruled, however, that Melvin Seelye was not 5 yards behind the line of scrimmage when he aimed a pass at Don Crumbaker. It was the first of two trips the gangling end made to the counting station, each time to be called back by rule infractions.

Less than five minutes after the second quarter opened the Wildcats had a touchdown that did count. Taking the ball on the Kansas 25, Lyle Wilkins and Gene Fair collaborated to move the ball down to the 11. A pass, Fair to Wilkins, placed it on the 3, and Lanky Wilkins popped through unmolested.

Jubilant was no word for Central High reserves (above) as they danced about after Central had taken the lead from Tech in the 37th renewal of the two schools' rivalry yesterday in the Mt. Snatched Pass Gives Western 13-6 Victory

A 55-yard run on a pass interception by Jack Xanten, roving Western High center, with three minutes to play, gave Western a 13-6 victory over Gonzaga yesterday before 2,000 spectators at the winners' stadium.

Until Xanten made his "Frank Merriwell" catch, the game appeared destined to end in 6-6 deadlock because only five minutes previous to this Western pushed across its first touchdown to tie the score. Gonzaga scored in the second period.

The unusual sight of Xanten tucking the ball under his arm for the first time in his high school career sent the Western rooters home in satisfaction after they had witnessed one of the most thrill-packed games this season.

Disputed Touchdown

The majority of the game's action took place in the fourth quarter in which Western scored a disputed touchdown to tie the count and follow up with Xanten's run which won the game.

Starting from Gonzaga's 40, where an exchange of kicks had placed the ball, Ray Wrenn, a tackle, pulled out of the line and whipped a long heave to Jake Hilleary who was downed on the 16. Here Lane O'Donnell, Gonzaga quarterback, was injured and was removed from the game, but much to the surprise of Coach Orrel Mitchell, the Purple was penalized 5 yards for too many times out. Mitchell dashed out on the field, protesting that a team was not to be penalized in case of injury but Referee Fred (Knocky) Thomas refused to reverse his decision.

A line plunge by Hilleary advanced the ball to the 5 and here a duplication of the disputed play occurred. Gonzaga being penalized half the distance to the goal, which gave Western a first down on the 1-yard line and from here George Barnes plunged over for the touchdown. Barnes' pass to Snow for the extra point failed.

Three Eastern Games To Attract 200,000

By Bill Boni,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, No. 3.—College football harvests another bumper crop tomorrow, with high riding Tennessee meeting its second major test of the season in keyed-up Louisiana State; Southern California battling Oregon State in what may be the decisive game in the Western Rose Bowl race, and three Eastern games alone expected to draw over 200,000 customers.

From a competitive angle, the Baton Rouge and Portland games are the most important. L. S. U. and its Leo Bird-Ken Kavanaugh pass combination are ready to let go with everything against a Tennessee club anxious to win a post-season Bowl bid despite a spotty schedule, and Oregon State, only unbeaten and united team in the Pacific Coast Conference, should prove a major obstacle for a Southern California eleven that finally has eased into high after starting in low gear.

Notre Dame vs. Army

Notre Dame and Army, as is their annual custom, will furnish the top crowd, with some 75,000 expected to jam their way into Yankee Stadium for the twenty-sixth game in this colorful intersectional rivalry. Navy and Penn look to 70,000 fans for their clash at Philadelphia's Franklin Field, and the latest episode in the thrill-clogged Yale-Dartmouth series is expected to draw 60,000 in Yale Bowl.

The program in general is marked by the predominance of well-established favorites. Realizing that this usually presages a week-end notable for its upsets, this observer swings down the line with the following forecasts (probable attendance figures in parenthesis):

Oregon State-Southern California (30,000)—The Trojans have three fine quarterbacks who take turns at being third-stringers. The material is almost as strong at every position. Southern Cal.

Louisiana State-Tennessee (45,000)—They say the wraps will be taken off Tennessee for fair. The

Texas Tech Loses To Miami U., 19-0

Miami, Fla., Nov. 3 (AP).—Miami's hurricanes came to life tonight and swept to three touchdowns, the last on a 100-yard march, to wallop a favored Texas Tech football team, 19 to 0.

A crowd of 11,337 saw the Hurricanes smash 31 yards to a second-period touchdown, score again in the third when Johnny Noppenberg galloped 55 yards.

Irish, Cadets Have Lunch Together

Army Coach Invites Rivals From South Bend; All Enjoy It

New York, Nov. 3.—The telephone rang in Coach Elmer Layden's suite in the Westchester Country Club about 11 o'clock this morning. It was Coach Bill Wood of Army on the wire.

"How about bringing your boys over here to the Knollwood Country Club and having lunch with us?" Capt. Wood said to Coach Layden.

When the shock of surprise subsided and words came back to him, Coach Layden said: "Allright, Bill, I'll have our gang over there at 12:15."

And sure enough those bitterest of football rivals—Army and Notre Dame, who'll play before 76,000 in Yankee Stadium tomorrow in the twenty-sixth renewal of their intersectional series—sat shoulder to shoulder around the luncheon table and broke bread together.

Afterwards Capt. Wood said he hoped that every year from now, the Notre Dame football squad would be the guests of the Cadets at luncheon on the day before their football battle.

"I played against Elmer Layden in the Army-Notre Dame game for three years, in 1922, 1923 and 1924," said Capt. Wood, "and I didn't meet him until ten years later when I became assistant coach at West Point."

Praising Capt. Wood for his fine gesture, Layden said, "I think this little get-together of the boys will mean something to them a few years from now. I know I always regretted I didn't meet Bill Wood, Lighthorse Harry Wilson and other West Point players when I played against them. And you don't have much time to get acquainted out there on the football field, especially in an Army-Notre Dame game."

As for tomorrow's game, Notre Dame rules a 4-to-1 betting favorite among the Broadway pricemakers. The odds are completely haywire. Notre Dame, unbeaten in five games, should win, but Army, coming up to this game in better shape mentally and physically than for any previous game, can win. Last year the Cadets took the Irish into the fourth period leading, 7 to 6, before finally wilting under pressure and losing, 19 to 7.

Arizmendi Beaten

Chicago, Nov. 3 (AP).—Sammy Angott, of Louisville, No. 1 challenger for the world's lightweight championship, registered his seventeenth straight victory tonight by decisively defeating Alberto (Baby) Arizmendi, Mexican lightweight from Los Angeles, in a bristling 10-round battle in the Chicago stadium.

Princeton Star's Condition 'Satisfactory' After Operation

By the Associated Press

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 3.—The athletic career of Donald G. (Hooker) Herring, 6-foot-5 Princeton University football player and discus ace, ended today with amputation of his left leg above the kneecap as the result of an injury received in last Saturday's game against Brown Uuniversity.

Told of the surgery three hours before it began, the 21-year-old junior had a "perfectly grand attitude," said Dr. Robert W. Johnson, jr., of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. The surgeon said Herring stood the 90-minute operation "well" and his condition is "satisfactory."

The general reaction of the student body, over which a cloud of gloom had hung all day, was one of relief that the operation had been successful. The football squad, told of the amputation, remained tight-lipped and went about its preparations for tomorrow's game against Harvard, but Coach Tad Wieman said:

"The coaching staff and the squad are relieved at the success of the operation. We have reluctantly reconciled ourselves to missing his fine play and his stimulating personality. We all naturally hope he has a very speedy recovery."

The Daily Princetonian, undergraduate newspaper, will print tomorrow an article by Edward O. Cerf, '40, the sports editor, saying:

"One must feel his injury should not be used to launch an attack on intercollegiate football . . . Level headed and unmelodramatic, Don would never wish for an expression of sentimental sympathy. Yet it would be pretty nice if Capt. Bob Tierney and his men could go out and win today's game for the Hooker."

Wieman assigned Les Rice, lighter but almost as tall as the Lambertville lad, to Herring's place at right tackle for the Harvard game.

George Washington's fearless Colonials pulled the Tiger's tail last night and discovered that unlike the barking dogs who don't bite the feline football species can unsheath a mighty set of fangs when aroused.

For nearly three periods of a thrill-packed game at Griffith Stadium Bill Reinhart's unpredictable Colonials carried the fight to the highly favored Clemson Tigers, easy conqueror of Navy, while 10,000 fans saw one of the best collegiate games of many a season here. But after the G. W.'s had pulled up from a first half deficit to threaten the Tigers at 6-7, Clemson hurriedly pulled away to win, 13-6.

Clemson had scored first with 20 seconds remaining of the first half on a 12-yard pass from Banks McFadden to End Joe Blalock, a sophomore. George Washington came back in the third period to uncork a nifty 54-yard touchdown pass, from Billy Richardson to End Bob Nowaskey and it was anybody's ball game.

71-Yard March

Even then, with the score favoring Clemson at 13-6, George Washington wasn't through. With a display of the same courageous spirit that enabled them to hold Georgetown to a disputed one-touchdown margin, the Colonials came within inches of a second touchdown which might have led to a tie score at 13-13.

The Colonials threatened to deadlock the game at the same moment that Clemson appeared to clinch it. The Tigers had driven from midfield to the George Washington 1-yard line, with Shad Bryant and Aubrey Rion heading the attack. Two penalties set them back to the 11 and then Rion cracked the line and, when hit, tried to hand the ball to a mate.

Misses Touchdown

Instead Billy Richardson, the Colonials' fine little halfback who was to be carried from the field soon after with slight injuries which necessitated his spending the night in the George Washington Hospital together with Center Tim Swett, grabbed the ball from Rion. Taking the Clemson team by surprise, he sped 75 yards down the sidelines from his own 1-yard line to the Tigers' 24 as the crowd screamed for a touchdown. The stubby Richardson couldn't quite make it, however, and he was hit and hit so hard he fumbled, the ball being recovered by Bob Nowaskey.

There George Washington was in position to score; in position to tie the Clemson team which had been expected to beat the Colonials anywhere from 13 to 20 points. But, although they managed to pick up a first down on the eight, the threat died out because of one of the few mistakes the alert Colonials made all night.

Nowaskey Scores

On fourth down, after Halfback Ed Milamoski lost five on an attempted end sweep, Milamoski threw wildly to Walter Fedora, a flanker, and Fedora's hopes for a long pass were squelched. They were squelched immediately by a flock of Tigers, who smothered him on the 15, and Clemson took over the ball on downs.

This play, on which the tailback passed to the flanker, who in turn

Joe Schenck Captures Autumn Handicap at Pimlico Track

Ryan Pilots $12.20 Shot To Victory

Allegro Beats Out Speed to Spare in a Place Photo Finish; Manfuso's Tait Hurt

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent.

Pimlico Race Track, Baltimore, Md., Nov. 3.—Running last and apparently headed for nowhere in particular at the half pole, the Woolford Farm's Joe Schenck gathered momentum, came around his field and won going away by a length. Thus the son of the late sire, Insco, wrote his name on the list of winners of a $2,500 added Baltimore Autumn Handicap along with those of Sun Egret, High ..eet and other good sprinters.

Joe Schenck, excellently handled by little Paul Ryan, finished in front of a keen battle for second money in which the camera said the Dixiana Stable's Allegro had nosed out Speed to Spare, one time Vanderbilt hope and now racing for the Circle M. Ranch.

Backers of Joe Schenck were rewarded with a return of $12.20 for the usual deuce and rooted him to the wire in time of 1:12 1-5. The victory was worth $2,945 to the Woolford Stable.

The second race was a sad one for John A. Manfuso, Washington sportsman. His Henry Tait, well placed in the early running, was cut down by the shoes of a rival and suffered a badly cut ligament. Jockey Nick Wall pulled him up. It may be necessary to destroy the son of Mowlee and En Passant.

PHARA FROST, allowed to settle into best stride and not hurried for half, responded willingly when placed to hand ride, circled leaders to take command in midstretch and drew out easily. CAREFUL MISS, reserved within striking distance, rallied gamely in closing stages, but could not seriously menace winner. MY ELSIE saved while setting pace and weakened gradually through stretch. DOROTHY ROCK was keen forward factor to stretch and tired. AIRACUDA had good speed on outside for half and faltered. ZOSTERA was closest to pace to stretch and stopped. HE GOES was outrun.

Selections at Pimlico

Dear Al:

In addition to seeing a grand program, those who report for the action today will get their first look at the new Puett gate. The starting device will be used for the first time in this section in the Walbrook Handicap, the fifth race. Unfortunately this race is out of the 6 furlong chute, so unless you have strong glasses or are over there you probably won't see much. Horsemen and jockies are loud in their praise of this gate. Starter Milton has been breaking horses out of it and says that only two horses in fifty have failed to get out at the sound of the bell. Speaking of Starter Milton, I understand he has 23 horses on his schooling list. It wouldn't be a bad idea if he put a couple of those assistant starters on it too. Especially that one who tried to chin himself on Bullett B. in that race here opening day. The Pimlico Futurity is the top race today and it should prove a merry scramble. Much interest in the race revolves around the first meeting of E. R. Bradley's Bimelech, already being touted as a Kentucky Derby hope, and Yancey Christmas' Rough Pass, the bargain colt which tied knots in Victory Morn over at Laurel. The race is at a mile and a sixteenth and should provide plenty of competition. The filly Penelope D. broke a leg while training yesterday morning and was destroyed. Alfred Robertson, a contract rider for the Milky Way Farm, will sever his connections with that stable when his contract expires on December 1. If you can get over early today, you will see the annual parade of stallions that are standing in Maryland. The show will take place in the infield starting at noon. Gustave Ring's Ringie, has bucked and has been turned out. Tommy Hitchcock has sold Saluda, the good steeplechaser, to the Groton Stable which shipped the horse to Belmont for the United Hunts meeting. Now for the winners.

BILL.

First race—Zenana finally drops down where she belongs and indicates from late races that she is on edge to give her best. Ghost Flyer won his last race in New York over a distance of ground and will be the one to beat if he retains his early speed. Chancer is not out of it and might go well.

Second race—Orchid's Next won her last race at Laurel in good time. She is improving steadily and should make it two in a row. Lady Infinite is a consistent sort and will be the one to beat. Light Chatter receives a good figure in this company and has the speed to upset the dope.

Third race—Steve Brody has been holding his own running with the better grade of brush toppers and he appears well placed with these mediocer performers. Inshore is a jumper of stake caliber but hasn't been out in several years. Spinach was a winner at Laurel and should hold the others safe.

Fourth race—Titilator is not a sprinter and his race here opening day must be regarded. His races at Keenland over a distance of ground accord him the edge in this field. Hand Organ beat classy juveniles at Laurel and raced well in the Selima. Tactician can better his last race.

Fifth race—Airflame may have needed his two Laurel races but if he runs back to his race behind Be Sure he should be capable of whipping competition of this sort. Toddle On won her last but she is not a sprinter. Roar raced with success as Laurel and should go well.

Sixth race—Bimelech winner of of five straight races, has turned back the best juveniles that were sent out against him. His usual sterling performance should keep his record unbroken. Merry Knight won a handicap in New York in the mud and in the event of an off track might surprise. Straight Lead won the Narrapansett Futurity but may be outmatched in this company.

Seventh race—Seed turned in a creditable effort when competing against better grade platers in the mud at Laurel. The stable has its horses ready and we'll string along. Count Tetrarch is the one to beat. Kinross won in New York and might prove a formidable factor

Eighth race—Tedium is the class of this field and after several races in New York he should be primed for the best effort. Grandever is dropping down and has the speed to be dangerous. Charlotte Girl, a beaten favorite last outing, should show an improved effort.

Best bet—Bimelech.

For the second successive week Georgetown University's football forces, undefeated since 1937 and boasting 12 victories and a tie for 13 games, will be in a bad psychological spot this afternoon when they meet West Virginia in the thirteenth renewal of a traditional rivalry at Griffith Stadium.

Kickoff will be at 2:00. Probable attendance: 10,000, including several thousand students who will be guests on "Georgetown Day."

Just as last week when Georgetown entered a game with George Washington's fired-up team, a 1-2 favorite and lost considerable prestige when it won only 7-0, the Hoyas have everything to lose and nothing to gain by playing the Mountaineers.

Ready for Hoyas

Although West Virginia is not expected to be keyed up quite as high as was George Washington, the Mountaineers undoubtedly will be set to "shoot the works." An upset of Georgetown and the attendant national publicity would compensate in a large measure for what so far has been a mediocre season for "Sleepy" Glenn's gang.

This was to have been a banner season at West Virginia. Glenn had plenty of big experienced linemen, and a versatile backfield headed by Charlie Hockenberry and Harry Clark. The Mountaineers got off to a good start by swamping weak West Virginia Wesleyan, 44-0, but that victory merely stirred up false hopes. For in quick succession West Virginia lost to Pitt, 20-0, nosed out Cincinnati only, 7-0, dropped a 9-0 decision to Washington and Lee, and in its latest start was held to a 6-6 tie by oft-beaten South Carolina.

Hagerty "Fears Worst"

Head Coach Jack Hagerty, of Georgetown, yesterday expressed fears that the Hoyas' streak might be smashed by the reckless Mountaineers who last season held a favored G. U. team scoreless until the last eight minutes of the game, but lost 12-0 on passes.

"We will have to be greatly improved over last week's performance to beat West Virginia tomorrow," Hagerty declared, "and I'm taking nothing away from a game G. W. club when I say this.

"Psychology favors West Virginia because, despite my warnings, most of the boys are looking ahead to the Maryland and N. Y. U. games."

Though Georgetown may not be at its mental peak for this game, the team should be better prepared physically than at any time this season. Thursday's shakeup of the line-up which benched seven regulars in favor of second-stringers is expected to have a stimulating effect on the veterans and youngsters alike, for their performances today will determine in no small way who will be in the starting lineup against Maryland.

Spencer Returns

The return to action of Jack Spencer, the nearest approach Georgetown has to a triple-threat back, also should strengthen the Hoyas. Spencer, out all season with a bad shoulder, will not be in the opening lineup, but is reported ready for duty. He should make a big difference in the Georgetown spread formation, which has suffered from the lack of a back who could run, kick or pass with any degree of success.

Improved Navy Team Meets Penn in 24th Series Renewal

Annapolis, Nov. 3.—A Navy football team, which Maj. "Swede" Larson, head coach, considers vastly improved defensively over the eleven which lost to Clemson here a week ago, and with a stronger and better coordinated attack, will engage tomorrow at Philadelphia in the twenty-fourth contest with Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania, Navy's oldest opponent in big time football, has won 12 of the series which began in 1888, and Navy has won nine, with three ties, but Maj. Larson and Navy people generally are not so much interested in the status of the series as they are in the Navy's hopes of winning its first major game of the season and to develop a winning spirit, pointing to a victory over the Army.

Maj. Larson said today he would start his power backfield made up of Monty Whitehead, Cliff Lenz, Pat Gray and Harold Hansen, and a reconstructed line much lighter than any which Navy has used so far this season.

The pony backfield, faster and with greater passing ability, than the power quartet, is made up of Bob Leonard, Lou Mayo, Ralph Boyer and Ev Malcolm. However, Malcolm has not been well this week, and his place may be taken by Sammy Boothe, to whom considerable attention has been given this week. Boothe, a stout, 180-pound sophomore, is fast and shifty, and a hard and accurate punter. Like Malcolm, he is a port-sider, and the Navy may have a "sleeper" in this youngster.

Washington-Lee Triumphs, 21-0

Washington-Lee High's Little Generals captured their seventh straight grid triumph of the season yesterday at Ballston when they handed Fredericksburg High a 21-0 defeat. Arnaud and French found their way over the foe's goal in the second quarter and Alexander added the final score in the fourth. Left Tackle Hoover came out of the line to pin a perfect placement on each score.

Howard, Morgan Meet Here Today

Morgan Bears, of Morgan College, Baltimore, will meet the Howard University football squad at Howard Stadium this afternoon at 2:15.

Howard's 50-piece band, under the direction of Sergt. John Brice, will be on hand to entertain the large number of Baltimore and Washington people expected.

Redskins and Eagles To Clash Tomorrow

Philadelphia Has Defensive Record Superior To That of Locals; Flaherty Sends Squad Through Long Drill for Stadium Game

The Philadelphia Eagles will bring to Griffith Stadium tomorrow a defensive record superior to the Redskins,' according to official National League statistics.

Opponents have gained only 1,089 yards against the Eagles this season, compared to the 1,347 yards yielded by the Redskins. The Eagles have been the victims of only 34 enemy passes, compared to 54 pass completions against the Redskins. The Philadelphia club has played only five games, however, compared to Washington's six.

Redskin Coach Ray Flaherty, fully cognizant of the Eagles power despite their lowly standing in the league, whipped his squad through another long drill yesterday at Griffith Stadium. Last night he lectured his athletes on the stupidity of underrating the Eagles.

The Philadelphia team, featuring Davey O'Brien's passes and Franny Murray's punting, has suffered chiefly this season from a lack of reserves. The Eagles' starting lineup has unfailingly given a fine account of itself, but the club has been worn down by superior reserve strength of the opposition.

O'Brien completed half of the 16 passes he threw against the Redskins in the season's opener. The Redskins won the game, 7-to-0, when Sammy Baugh completed a long pass to Charlie Malone in the final period.

The Redskins this week have been attempting to improve their pass defense by shuffling their line-up. Roving Center Mickey Parks has been ordered into the line on defense and Guard Jim Karcher, lighter and more alert, will back up the line and cover eligible pass receivers.

Reports from Philadelphia indicate that the Eagles are an improved team despite the release of Dave Smukler, hefty fullback, and Hank Reese, veteran center and field goal kicker. Dissension in the team's ranks has been eliminated, according to Owner-Coach Bert Bell.

Coach Ray Flaherty was hopeful last night that fair weather would continue, insuring a dry field. On the wet turf at Milwaukee last week, Flaherty saw the precision of the Redskin attack wrecked and withheld Jimmy German from the game. The comparatively light German, useless to the Redskins on a wet gridiron, is destined to see prolonged action tomorrow if the field is dry.

Schmeling Denies Planning U.S. Trip; War Status Mystery

Madrid, Nov. 3 (U.P.).—Max Schmeling, former world's heavyweight champion, whose wartime status in Germany is something of a mystery, arrived from Barcelona today and denied he is planning to go to the United States.

Schmeling

German embassy officials greeted the boxer at Barajas Airfield. "I came to Spain for a short stay," Schmeling said. "I do not have definite plans, but I am going to look over spots for good movies."

Whether he was contemplating a movie role for himself or for his wife, Anny Ondra, an actress, was not explained.

Schmeling, who said he may go to Seville later, believed his scheduled fight with Walter Neusel in Germany, postponed last month because of the war, probably will take place next May.

Asked whether he would like another fight with Joe Louis, he said, "sure." Schmeling, who weighed 193 pounds, looked in perfect condition.

G.W.'s Rally Fails, Clemson Triumphs, 13-6

Tigers Halt Drive On 8-Yard Line In Last Period

passed downfield, was the same play which made possible George Washington's first touchdown.

It was midway of the third period. George Washington had possession on its own 33. Richardson passed to Fedora on the flank for 13 and a first down on the G. W. 46. Then, Richardson again faded back. Fedora was again playing the flanker. Richardson faked a pass to Fedora, turned and shot a beauty to Nowaskey who cut across to the middle from his left end position. He took the ball on the 25 and outran the Clemson safety, Bryant, in a race to the goal.

Nowaskey's placement was wide.

As if it realized the G. W. threat of an upset—an upset which would have ranked with the most stunning of the year—Clemson went into high gear with the kickoff following touchdown.

The first Tiger team returned, to the game. Bryant, who shared honors with McFadden as the outstanding stars in a splendid Clemson backfield, returned Mike Monchlovich's kickoff 15 yards to the Clemson 29. On the next play, a reverse, Rion took the ball from Chippy Maness and skirted left end for 47 yards, being tackled from behind by G. W. safety Richardson on the Colonial 24.

Fullback Timmons and McFadden picked up a first down on the 13, and McFadden then plunged to the 8. From there Bryant circled George Washington's left end for a touchdown, fumbling the ball simultaneously with his crossing of the goal line.

Bryant, who had place-kicked the point after Clemson's first touchdown, was balked on his second try by Sunny Jones, G. W. tackle, who deflected his second attempt with his hands.

Surprise to G. W.

Clemson's first touchdown, made three plays before the first half ended, came as a stunning surprise to G. W. rooters, who had watched George Washington make most of the scoring gestures up until that time. The Tigers had marched in a sustained drive from their own 44 to the G. W. 12.

The drive was nearly stopped by G. W.'s Wilamoski, who had his hands on a pass from Rion before dropping it. That muff cost the Colonial's a touchdown and possibly the ball game. For on the next play, McFadden, who later in the game quick-kicked 73 yards on the fly, proved his claim to All-American recognition with as perfect a pass as is imaginable.

Rushed by Colonial linemen, McFadden coolly faked the throw to the left end zone at the west end of the field and then rifled a clothesline pass to Blalock, who cut across toward the middle to take the ball just behind Tim Swett, G. W. center, and step over for the score.

Spectacular Game

Not only was each touchdown of this game scored on sensational plays, but there were so many spectacular non-scoring plays as to make their enumeration difficult.

The kicking of McFadden and Rion for Clemson was perhaps the best seen in any college or professional game here this season. McFadden never kicked less than 40 yards and twice his punts were downed inside the Colonial 20. His 72-yard quick kick in the third period traveled almost as far up into the air as it did down the field. It was a masterful punt that isn't seen very often.

Both teams played wide-open football, passing from deep in their own territory. Even when it led, 13-6, Clemson gambled repeatedly in an attempt to score, and the crowd was in an uproar from start to finish.

Excellent Blocking

The George Washington kicking, particularly by Wilamoskey and Richardson, who played even better than he did last week against Georgetown, also was excellent. In average it matched Clemson's mark of 40 yards per try, but in effectiveness it didn't—not by far.

Bob Nowaskey, G. W.'s senior end who is sought by every professional team in hte National League, was just about the best player on the field. In one series of downs, aided by another end, August and Guard Ziobro, Nowaskey smeared three successive Clemson pass attempts for a net loss of 21 yards. This great defensive exhibition halted a Tiger touchdown threat.

Runaway Horse Killed by Truck At Bel Air

Bel Air, Md., Nov. 3 (AP).—Mr. Bun, a good plater in his prime, ran his last race today. He finished second to a truck and lost his life.

The 7-year-old chestnut plater, owned by E. K. Bryson, escaped from his quarters at the Bel Air track and took to the highway. He was run down by a truck whose driver said he didn't see Mr. Bun until too late.

State Patrolman T. J. Farrell absolved the driver.

Georgetown Prep Defeats St. Albans

Saints' First Defeat By Preps in Four Years of Competition

For the first time in four years Georgetown Prep won a grid decision from St. Alban's yesterday on the Garrett Park field, staving off a violent Saint rally in the closing minutes for a 13-12 victory.

The two teams, which battled to a deadlock last year and annually provide the highlight of prep school grid activity, played on even terms yesterday. In the end it was a line buck for extra point, attempted by the Saints' Walt Swift, that lost for St. Alban's. Swift was stopped by a determined Prep wall.

Despite his crucial failure, however, Swift sparked his team's drive as much as did Bud Eckrich, for the eventual winners. Both scored a pair of touchdowns.

Eckrich provided the Little Hoyas a lead in the first quarter when he capped a long advance with a 4-yard plunge over the goal line. Ray Barrett made a perfect placement. In the second quarter Swift came back to almost knot the count with a 2-yard plunge, but Jack Hare missed the placement and Georgetown Prep led, 7-6, at the half.

Eckrich's final scoring effort and the most brilliant of the game came early in the fourth quarter when he picked up the ball at his own 39 and triple reversed his field for a 61-yard score. When Swift came back with another touchdown a few minutes later, after passes had brought the ball to the Prep 1-foot line, the score stood at 13-12, needing only an extra point for a tie.

One of the rare capacity crowds at Brookland Stadium is expected to turn out this afternoon to watch Catholic University expose its five-game winning streak to a strong Tulsa University eleven in one of the outstanding college football attractions of the local season.

Kickoff will be at 2:30. Probable attendance: 13,000.

The Cardinals, with an eye toward another Orange Bowl bid, consider the Tulsans as perhaps their biggest hurdle and are prepared both mentally and physically for their most impressive performance of the campaign.

Colorful Attack

The Hurricane eleven, current leader of the Missouri Valley Conference, will feature its colorful attack, centering about a bewildering spread formation. In Roy Buffalo, a full-blooded Aquapaw Indian, and Pat Smith, a good old Irish lad, the Tulsans have a pair of exceptionally versatile and speedy backs. Buffalo was reported a doubtful starter because of injuries received in last week's game with Detroit, but appeared in fine shape yesterday as the Tulsa team worked out at Brookland.

Detroit, a common foe, offers the only direct basis of comparison between Catholic and Tulsa. The Cards beat the Titans, 14-13, with the aid of two blocked kicks. The Titans defeated Tulsa, 16-7, although they were greatly outplayed, according to reports received by C. U. Coach Bergman.

Moreover, Tulsa will be an improved team over the one that lost to Detroit, if for no other reason than it will have available seven players who were not used against the Titans owing to injuries.

Better Opposition

The visitors will have at least one pre-game edge on the Cardinal's, and that is the experience of meeting better opposition. Tulsa's two defeats this season were by Detroit and Oklahoma A. & M., and both are powers in the Midwest. In addition, Tulsa claims victories over Creighton and Centenary, a pair of tough little teams which have difficulty in arranging schedules because their "names" aren't commensurate with the ability of their elevens.

The 13-7 victory over Centenary is a good gauge of Tulsa's strength, because the same Centenary extended both Rice and Texas A. & M. before losing by two tuchdowns to each.

Catholic U. will give away weight in the backfield and in the line. Tulsa has one of the heaviest starting backfields to appear here in many years. Buffalo, at 165 pounds, is the lightest. Quarterback Lee Gentry scales 188; Fullback Joe Gibson, 200, and Halfback Pat Smith, 203.

The Cardinals are expected to again center their attack around 203-pound Fullback Rocco Pirro, who leads the District scorers with five touchdowns, and flashy Charley Moutenot and Hank Brostek. C. U. will have little fears of getting the worst of it in the punting department because Quarterback Pete Sachen has averaged 48.8 yards per kick in five games—a truly remarkable achievement.

Anacostia Eleven Defeats Wilson, 20 to 6; Faircloth Star

Victors Hold Second Place In High Race

Indians Launch Early Attack to Turn Back Inter-High Foes; 2,000 Watch Battle

The rollicking Indians of Anacostia High, behind their husky triple-threat halfback, Art Faircloth, romped to a 20-6 victory over Woodrow Wilson High yesterday at the new Wilson Stadium before about 2,000 spectators and held to their second place standing in the inter-high series.

Faircloth scored two of the Indians' touchdowns, threw most of Anacostia's passes, and handled the largest part of kicking and line-bucking.

The first quarter had hardly got under way when Faircloth began Anacostia's second successful inter-high football effort with a drive which he capped with a 3-yard plunge over the President goal. Joe Farmer gave the Indians a 7-0 lead by falling on Faircloth's blocked kick over the goal line.

Wilson began its first scoring drive in the public school series, during which it has lost three straight, from its own 15 as the second quarter started. It was Halfback Crane, whose drive climaxed 85 yards of bitter struggling, the feature of which was a forward pass deflected by Spencer into the arms of Ray Hillock.

Faircloth and Knott, a tackle, provided Anacostia's second half scoring, the first taking the ball over on a 7-yard trip in the third period, and Knott scoring as the game was in its dying minutes on a lateral from Abshur. Faircloth missed the first conversion, but made the second good when he took Turner's aerial in the end zone.

Central High Beats Tech

collapsed completely, and Central sneaked in another score before Referee Paul Magoffin's whistle sent another Tech-Central game into the pages of history.

Hardly a soul among the 6,000 assembled failed to notice the hoax Central's triple-threater, Steiner, perpetrated on the Tech secondary. After one unsuccessful pass to the right to Dick Farr, Steiner again peered sharply at Farr as he faded for another aerial. Instead of to Farr, however, the pass went to Di Blasi on the flats and the three Manual Trainers who finally reached him slid off his hip pads as he squirmed to the touchdown.

Exactly three plays after the Steiner grenade that DiBlasi exploded in Tech's face, Central hit the scoring column with its final and superfluous touchdown. Steiner kicked off to Jack Walsh, who wriggled from his own 10 to the 28 before a solid block of Centralites stopped him.

At that point Vic McCampbell, a specialist in passing, entered the game. He hit the line and made 1 yard, and then moved back for a pass. The lob landed beautifully in the arms of Central's Harry Martin on the 30 and he went to the Tech 7 before he was wrestled to the ground by Johnny Buckley. Martin made 3 through the line, Jim Porter added another, and Johnny Bredbenner nose-dived the remaining distance. Steiner converted for the second straight time.

Though it started the game with an advance that reached from its own goal line to midfield, Central was forced to rely on a Tech fumble and field goal to start scoring.

On Tech's first trip with the ball Jim Miller fumbled on the 22, where Co-Captain Jack Wilhelm recovered. Steiner and Bredbenner combined for a first on the Tech 11, but there the attack bogged. A short pass, Steiner to Farr, brough the leather to the four on third down, and Steiner, evidently under instructions to score as soon as possible, kicked the first scholastic field goal of the season.

Fro mthen until the breath-taking fourth period Central hung to its 3-0 advantage and Tech got closer than the 19-yard line to pay territory.

With the ball on Central's 35, Walsh put Tech in scoring position on the last play of the third period with a perfect slant to Bill Dellastatious on the 11. Like an inspired eel, Walsh began the final quarter with an off-guard lunge that gave Tech its brief 7-3 lead.

For five minutes thereafter pedestrians at Thirteenth and F must have heard the roar from the McKinley stands. It was the first time in three years the Maroon had held a lead over Central, and Tech made the most of it. The band played "Tech High Will Shine Tonight" until it was out of breath. Anyway, until Central gobbled up that lead.

Trainer Gets Suspension In New York

Joe Peters and Two Others Barred in Dope Case; Slattern Victim

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 3.—Trainer Joe Peters was indefinitely suspended today by the New York State Racing Commission after an investigation concerning alleged drugging of the horse Slattern.

Peters is trainer of the string owned by John Craig. Suspended with him indefinitely was his nephew and stable watchman, Joseph Quirino. Albert Brooks, Slattern's regular groom, was suspended for four weeks.

Slattern was the winner of the sixth race at Jamaica on October 21. The racing commission laboratory made a saliva test on the horse, which, the commission contended, disclosed the presence of a narcotic.

Following the usual procedure in such cases, the commission informed the Federal Bureau of Narcotics which cooperated in the investigation.

Under a new commission regulation, today's ruling automatically forces Owner Craig to forfeit the winner's share of the purse for the race to J. V. Tigani's The Queen, which finished second.

The commission explained in its ruling that Quirino was suspended because the investigation showed he had been in charge of Slattern at "various times" during the morning of the race.

Paavo Nurmi Gets Call to Colors; Will Be Chauffeur

Helsinki, Finland, Nov. 3 (U.P.).—Paavo Nurmi, one of the greatest distance runners who ever drew on a spiked shoe, was called to the colors today.

Nurmi, operator of a haberdashery shop since his retirement some years ago, will serve as a chauffeur.

Nurmi won five Olympic running titles. He won the 10,000-meter run and the cros-country event in 1920; the 1,500 and 5,000-meter and cross-country runs in 1924, and the 10,000-meter run in 1928.

Three of Nurmi's world records still stand.

the second quarter, and coincidentally, it was an intercepted pass which paved the way for this score. Bob Mulvihill, big Purple fullback, stepped in front of one of Barnes' passes on his own 30 and ran 50 yards to the Western 20. The Gonzagans were quick to capitalize, and with Elmer Raba, 16-year-old speedster, leading the way, drove to the Western 2-yard line and from here a spinner play, "Muffins" Healey to Jack Scully, produced the touchdown. Jack Walsh's attempted dropkick was blocked.

Both teams were attacked by "fumblitis" in the opening moments of the first quarter, the ball changing hands four times without the benefit of a kick in the first three minutes. The ball was in Gonzaga's territory most of the period, with Western being unable to capitalize on a blocked kick and two fumbles.

V. M. I. Cross-Country Team Wins, 27-28

Richmond, Va., Nov. 3 (A.P.).—V. M. I.'s well-balanced cross-country team defeated the University of Richmond Harriers, 27 to 28, over the four-mile University of Richmond course today.

Ambitious Youngsters, Without Sponsors, Are Making Good Headway

A fella's just got to practice if he's going to play good football. If there's no field handy and he's got to work after school—well, some way has got to be figured around even that.

In the case of Cardinal A. C., a gang of 135-pound kids over in Northeast, the problem has been solved quite well. Three times a week at 7 o'clock in the evening the Cards gather in front of Eliot Junior High School, change into football garb in the dim light of the entrance, and go through a two-hour workout on Eliot's well-kept lawn.

Of course the only light for the drill comes from a flickering street lamp and the moon, and the playing surface of the impromptu gridiron is about as large as an apartment house back yard. There's a flag pole with a concrete base in the middle, too. Despite all this, the Cards are doing quite well, thank you.

Five Easy Victories

Six games they've played so far. In five of them they were easy victors, and in the sixth, against the 150-pound Carmelites, they managed for a 6-6 tie. Maybe when they play in the daytime their eyes, sharpened by workouts in the semi-dark, pick out holes in the enemy line a regular day-practicing fullback wouldn't see.

Jack Hoffman, 16-year-old member of the Cards, thinks that might be so. Anyway, he's glad his club, of which he is manager, coach and player, has a place and time to practice, no matter where and when. He's presided over the Cardinal A. C. for six years, since he first organized it, sent it into every sport as the seasons rolled around, and he's very happy it didn't have to disband because his men had to work in the afternoon.

"Most of us guys have played football, basket ball and baseball together since we were 10 years old," Jack proudly said. "You can't break up a combination like that. Guys like Duke Coppage, "Puddin" Spicer, Buddy McGrGow, Bucky Seaton, Ezra Fowler, "One-Eye" Roberts and Babe Holland have been with us since we began. We gotta keep going.

Wants Good Sports

"I've tried to keep the gang made up of guys who like to play and don't expect anything from it," young Hoffman continued. "That's why we don't have a regular sponsor. Attorney Charles E. Ford, my uncle, sort of sponsored us enough to get jerseys, but he don't expect a lot of changes in our club like other sponsors. We'll do all right, like we are."

There's little doubt that Jack and his Cards are doing all right. At the moment, Jack has been forced to give up his end position, his collarbone having been cracked in a game last week. But he still coaches and manages the team. The doctor says he can take the tape off his shoulder Tuesday. Then, 135-pound gridders of Washington, watch out for the "Street Lamp Stylists!"

Georgia Beats Little Mercer Again, 16 to 9

Bears Haven't Won From Bulldogs Once in 21 Starts

By the Associated Press

Athens, Ga., Nov. 3.—Mercer's big line, battered by three major football teams within four weeks, crashed under pressure of a spirited Georgia rally today and the Bulldogs maintained their jinx over the Baptists by rushing over a touchdown 25 seconds before the finish for a 16-9 victory before 5,000.

Georgia rode to its twenty-first straight victory over Mercer upon the flying heels of Cliff Kimsey in a climactic drive which carried 62 yards.

Scores on Pass

His two 17-yard sprints and several shorter spurts carried the Bulldogs to Mercer's seven-yard line. Billy Mims tried a pass and it failed to connect. It was fourth down, goal to go and 25 seconds remained. Mims dropped back, flipped another aerial and Alex McCaskill flagged it in the end zone.

Heroic efforts of Spec Landrum and Art Pledger threatened to keep Georgia from winning for the fifth straight week-end. Their passing running and Pledger's pass interception carried the Baptists to a 9-9 tie early in the fourth period.

Pledger raced 22 yards back to Georgia's 40 after snagging a Georgia aerial. He caught another from Landrum, for 12 yards and Landrum cracked the line for 20 more in two tries. Bill Powland raced 11 more and Harry Karszinas plunged over from the three-yard stripe.

Outplayed Completely

The Bears, outplayed at almost every turn except in punting, jumped into the lead at the start when Pledger booted a placement field goal from the 18 after Al Gerhardt recovered a fumble on Georgia's 10. The Bulldogs, however, immediately marched 46 yards to a touchdown, Kimsey skirting right end for the last 14 yards. McCaskill place-kicked the extra point, as he did after Georgia's other touchdown.

Georgia, after marching 66 yards to Mercer's 7 at the outset of the third period, gained a safety when Pledger, attempting to pass behind the goal line, stepped out of the end zone.

Navy Yard Five Rolls Record Team Game

627 by F. A. No. 1 Beats Previous High; Righter Ties Mark With 165

Navy Yard League provided the thrills of duckpin toppling last night at Lucky Strike when Dick Righter, of B. M. Shop No. 2, turned in a 165 game which tied the season record, and F. A. No. 1 cracked the standing team game mark with 627. The latter also had high set, 1,718, and Righter completed the combination with high individual set, 384.

Roger Pounds, of Congressional, had 144 and 400 to sweep individual honors in the Country Club League, and Indian Spring No. 1 took all team awards with 594 and 1,739. The leading Springs won three straight from Manor.

Game of 106 was the highest rolled in the I. D. R. A. League but two girls were tied for the honor, Henrietta Simons and Evelyn Gliem starred, rolling for Finance and District Administration, respectively. Evelyn had high set, 288.

A team season record for game, 596, was registered by Sacred Heart in the Washington Catholic League, as it also took night set honors with 1,681. The effort won three straight from St. Anthony depite Dunnigan's individual set of 390. St. Martin also whitewashed St. Peter's No. 2 behind the 158 game and 370 set of George Bayer. St. Peter's No. 1 got the odd-game decision over Our Lady of Victory, with George Harbins individual performances of 150 and 347 high.

Francis Crowlye had a 142 game and John Kane 343 set as St. Patrick's took a 2-to-1 decision from St. Gabriels.

A. B. Price sneaked into a first-place tie with Bacas Brothers in the Southeast Bowling League, with Norman Prather rolling 128 and 357. Ollie Pacini's best game, 133, for Quality Shop, helped him to a 374 set and his team to an odd-game victory over the Red Men. The best set, however, was turned in by Cutie Hayre, a 375, while Herb Young rolled best game, 148.

Vols have few spots to make major dents on the national picture, and this is one. Tennessee.

Army-Notre Dame (75,000)—The Cadets always come up for this one, sometimes even more than for Navy. Despite that and the several Irish injuries, we still like Notre Dame.

Ohio State-Indiana (40,000)—Ohio State to come roaring back from that Cornell upset.

Arkansas-Texas A. and M. (12,000)—The Aggies to keep riding toward the Southwest Conference title.

Minnesota-Northwestern (40,000)—The Gophers have had an extra week's rest, and the Wildcats appear to have found themselves. That makes it look close, with the edge to Minnesota.

Illinois-Michigan (30,000)—The Illini trying to defend Red Grange's reputation against the new "Galloping Ghost," Tom Marmon. He may look like one if the Wolverines shake him loose. Michigan.

Penn-Navy (70,000)—A tough one to pick, since both were rudely bounced around last week. Navy, in the belief all that material finally may get together.

Yale-Dartmouth (60,000)—Like Army against the Irish, Yale always hits a terrific peak for this game. Dartmouth will be the favorite, but this corner gambles with Yale.

Texas-Southern Methodist (23,000)—Beaten one point by Notre Dame and strong enough to tie Oklahoma. S. M. U. has a stout ball club. Still, Texas has been able to send Jack Crain on long gallops every Saturday, and should be able to do so again. Texas.

Princeton-Harvard (40,000)—First of the big three battles and, with the Tigers looking better from week to week and anxious to win this one for Hooker Herring, the choice is Princeton.

U. C. L. A.-California (40,000)—The Bruins expect to have something to say about that Rose Bowl. A good spot to speak their piece. U. C. L. A.

Alabama - Kentucky (16,000)—'Bama to end the Blue Grass winning streak.

Fordham-Rice (25,000)—Trying to figure out Rice's ups and downs is a job for an elevator man. They may be up, but Fordham's the pick.

Missouri-Nebraska (15,000)—Nebraska should have the defense for Paul Christman's passes.

Baylor-Texas Christian (15,000)—Looks like Baylor.

Mississippi-Vanderbilt (1g,000)—Ditto Ole Miss.

Oklahoma-Iowa State (25,000)—Not too tough for Oklahoma.

Cornell-Columbia (15,000)—Cornell, despite Carl Snavely's fears.

Purdue-Iowa (22,000)—Stringing with Kinnick and Iowa.

Stanford-Santa Clara (35,000)—Santa Clara.

Boston College-Auburn (12,000)—Boston College.

It's All a Dark Secret, 'Monk's' Plans for His 13 Black Felines

Thirteen Guys Will Get Seats but What Will Happen to the Cats Remains Mystery; Younger Promises No Harm

By the Associated Press

Roanoke, Va., Nov. 3.—It was a dark black secret tonight what V. P. I. Athletic Director W. L. (Monk) Younger would do with the 13 black cats he accepts as "tickets" to the V. P. I.-Furman game tomorrow. The only thing certain is that they won't be "harmed or embarrassed in any way."

His fur unruffled by the Roanoke Cat Club's warning that it would picket the gates if the plan was followed through, Younger purred: "I can assure you that these cats will be treated just as good as children. I've got a cat myself."

The plan, as mapped out, provided that the holders of the 13 cats should each receive a ticket for seat numbered 13. The tabbies were to be released on the 50-yard line as a gesture of defiance to any jinx which might be hovering over the Virginia Tech team as it goes into battle against Furman.

As best as could be determined amid the turmoil, it was the latter part of the plan concerning the race on the field which caused the Roanoke cat owners to get their backs up. They wired Younger as follows:

"A very few ignorant and superstitutious people who believe black cats bring bad luck are far outnumbered by cat lovers. We bitterly oppose your plan to torment cats at the game Saturday. It is not only cruel but dangerous. The Roanoke Cat Club will picket at the entrance unless the plan is called off."

The Tech athletic director was soothing in his reply.

"I might keep 'em all up at my house," he said. "(There was no word from the Younger cat on this point.) I'll certainly take good care of them. I'm afraid, from the calls I've gotten from students and town children, that most of the cats will be Blacksburg cats anyway, and that they'll go home when they want to."

Nation's Equine Stars Open Show In Gotham Tonight

New York, Nov. 3 (A.P.).—The fifty-fourth annual National Horse Show opens tomorrow night.

Depending on the point of view, that's important (a) because it launches eight days of undoubtedly the finest show of its kind in America or (b) it marks the formal opening of New York's winter social season.

Top hats and tiaras will be as common as boots and saddles in Madison Square Garden as the cream of Gotham's smart society and the most spectacular horseflesh of Chile, Mexico, South Africa, Canada, 42 States and the District of Columbia vie for opening night attention.

Entries for the show—highlighted nightly by the international military jumping contests between the United States, Mexico and Chile—number approximately 2,000, greatest since 1935. The show will run through Saturday night, November 11.

Penn Staters Are Favored Over Maryland

The Terp squad arrived here from College Park after taking its last workout for the Nittany Lion. The varsity team was joined here last night by the Maryland Jayvees, who met the Penn junior varsity in Philadelphia yesterday.

Although in good condition, with the lone exception of Halfback Merle DuVall, who is handicapped by injury, the Terps will be 5-to-2 underdogs.

Maryland plans to start tomorrow the same line-up that began the Florida game last week, in which the Terps suffered their third successive defeat.

Beamer and Shaffer are the ends; Brown and Albarno, tackles; Geinger and Lawrence, guards; Smith, center; Murphy, quarterback; Boyda and Skotnicki, halfbacks, and Wideher, fullback.

Devitt Prep Beaten, 19 to 6

Two pass interceptions in the fourth quarter, one good for 25 yards and another good for 30 yards, accounted for Devitt Prep's 19-6 loss to Mount St. Mary's Freshmen yesterday at Emmitsburg, Md.

The pass combination that hung up Devitt's sole touchdown against the yearling Mounts, "Punch" Kemp to Vermillion, was responsible for both interceptions which went for the winning touchdowns. The Mounts tallied in the first quarter after a sustained drive, and in the second stanza Kemp brought the count up even with a 6-yard flat pass to Vermillion.

3 Washington Guardsmen Win Fights

Two D. C. Scrappers Win by Kayoes; Three Other Entries Lose

Special Dispatch to The Post

Frederick, Md., Nov. 3.—Fistic representatives of the District of Columbia National Guard won three of the six bouts in which they participated on the American Legion's boxing bill here tonight.

Billy Kekeris, Washington lightweight, scored a technical knockout over Terry Klemens, Johnstown (Pa.) Golden Gloves titleholder, in the second round, when he cut his left eye with a right hook. The wound required four stitches.

Frank Cuddy, lanky Washington welterweight, knocked out Frank Ogg, of Gaithersburg, Md., in the first of a scheduled three-rounder. Three rights to the head dropped Ogg and Referee Tony Marrone stepped in and halted the melee when it was obvious that the Gaithersburg boy could not defend himself.

In one of the best bouts of the night, Bill Weaver, Washington welter, decisioned Morris Gaver, Frederick, in three fast rounds. A fast finish by Weaver gave him the nod.

Giving away 12 pounds in weight, Bill Nolan, Washington heavyweight, lost in five rounds to Sam Slatko, Johnstown, but left the ring amid a thunderous ovation. Nearly knocked out in the first round by a series of looping lefts, Noland came back to slug it out with his 200-pound opponent, but couldn't offset Slatko's early advantage.

Johnny Nyeste, Johnstown light heavyweight, scored a knockdown in the third round that earned for him a close victory over Johnny Rodgers, of Washington. Rodgers was leading until he walked into a short right.

Clifford Shelton, Frederick, opened the show with a close win over Tom Hallon, Washington. Shelton was fresher at the finish.

Friends' Six-Man Football Squad Opens With Victory

Friends School, which was the first to introduce six-man football to Washington, launched its second season of the sport yesterday on its home field with a 44-to-7 triumph over St. Paul, of Baltimore.

Armand Newmyer, quarterback of Friends, was by far the outstanding performer of the game with four touchdowns and two extra points through placement. Dulcan and Walton contributed touchdowns to the Wisconsin Avenue lads' cause, while St. Paul's only score was registered by Substitute Russell.

After summing up 20 points in the opening period, Friends was never worried about the game and coasted in with touchdowns in each of the final three quarters. The four conversions which Friends scored were all on placement—counting for 2 points—while St. Paul's single extra point came on a pass from Russell to Purcell.

'Life Insuring' Mortgage Boon To HomeBuyer

Policy Provides That Family Will Inherit Debt-Free Home

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Practice of "life-insuring" the home mortgage is becoming increasingly popular among home buyers and builders, Joseph C. Behan, chairman of "Annual Message of Life Insurance," observance, comments.

"For a small additional sum on the carrying charges, usually amounting to approximately 1 per cent of the mortgage, the home owner can guarantee that his family will be left the home and not merely a burdensome mortgage, in the event the family head dies," Mr. Behan said, in part.

"And one-third of a million family heads will die this coming year and each year thereafter," he added, "so this is not a vague and indefinite question for the home owner. Within the next three years—the most common mortgage term—at least 1,000,000 family heads will have died.

"In cases where amortization is required with the mortgage, the policy may be reduced as the period advances, so that the carrying charge for this protection is reduced in keeping with mortgage size. This may be accomplished in two ways, either by having the face amount of the policy reduced year by year or by writing the full sum in several small policies and dropping one at a time as the mortgage is reduced, unless they are desired for other purposes after serving this use. Some companies write a policy which does the same thing by automatic reduction each year.

Cost is Not Great

"The cost of these plans is small in proportion to the full carrying charges. On a $10,000 home, with a $6,000 mortgage, for instance, the basic carrying charges would be at least $300 per year and probably more. For the additional cost of usually about $60, the family can be assured that, if the property owner dies, the home will be theirs, free of debt, instead of burdened with a $6,000 indebtedness which, in many cases would prove too much to continue to carry. The precise cost can be secured from any agent, as it depends on the plan and the age of the owners.

"The life-insuring of home mortgages has been an aid to home building and buying in recent years, because it has enabled many persons to undertake home owning who would otherwise have been reluctant to undertake an additional burden on their family budgets. Sudden collapse of the family income as would follow the death of the income producer, would often leave no other conclusion than total loss of the home. This is equally true in all valuation groups, $4,000 to $40,000, because the sum is practically always large in proportion to the income and other wealth of the home owner."

Tax Burden Becomes Problem

Washington Association of Credit Men has received a report from the National Association on the result of a survey by the tax committee which declares the increased burden of taxes on business is creating a serious situation "with implications of danger to the capital position and credit stability of many American corporations."

The report calls attention to the need of reduced Government expenses and portrays the increasing percentage of company profits which are being paid out as taxes. The committee presents 15 recommendations which the credit men believe would correct conditions regarding which there is complaint. The report has been forwarded to the Treasury Department for consideration of proper Congressional committees.

Wheat Prices Reach Highest In Six Weeks

Feature of Pit Trading Is Jump of Soy Beans To $1 Per Bushel

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Nov. 3.—A rush to buy wheat in the final hour of trading today lifted prices to the highest point in six weeks, within about a cent of the war-boom peaks of September 7.

Some of the buying was in sympathy with a sharp upturn of soy bean prices which caused establishment of dollar-a-bushel quotations for the first time since March, 1938. A really in securities and the persistent hard winter wheat belt drought were factors in the wheat pit.

After declining as much as ½ cent in early dealings, wheat rallied to around previous closing figures than pushed upward to gains of 1¾ cents from early lows. Top prices were 88 for December and 87⅞ for May. A last minute reaction due to profit taking cut the gains but final prices were ⅝ to 1⅛ above yesterday, December, 87½@87⅜; May, 86⅞@86¾.

Beans shot up as much as 6½ cents to 99 for December and $1.25 for May but hacked down 1¼ to 2¼ from the highs to close 4 to 4¼ better than yesterday, December, 97¼; May, 99. Corn finished ¾ to 1⅛ higher, December, 50⅞@51; May, 53⅝@53¾; oats, ⅜ to ⅝ up; rye, ⅞ to 1⅛ higher, and lard unchanged to 3 lower.

Nazi Financial Strain Seen at Breaking Point

German Belts Reported Already Tightened To the Last Notch

New York, Nov. 3.—The presence of several German raiders in the Atlantic and the success of the German submarine campaign against the British Navy raise questions as to the present and potential effectiveness of the British blockade against Germany. It is hardly conceivable that Germany can break the blockade. And even if she could weaken the blockade considerably she would still be faced with the problem of finding means to pay for purchases abroad and with the threat of economic breakdown through internal inflation, according to an analysis by the Standard Statistics Co. today.

How much longer the structure will hold together depends upon the patience, endurance, and hardiness of the German people.

Statistical data show clearly that Germany would have great difficulty in financing purchases abroad because the Reich has only negligible amounts of gold and foreign exchange. Furthermore, the Nazis will have fewer goods for export than before the war.

Consumption Curtailed

The German economic machine has been running at top speed for some little time. Due to lack of skilled labor and high cost of production (despite reduced wages,) maintenance of production at the recent high level has become increasingly difficult. Therefore, in order to meet the needs of war, Germany has taken drastic measures to curtail internal consumption. The balance of goods available for export, however, is expected to decline sharply as more and more productive capacity is taken up with output of war materials.

While the financing of the government's huge armament program has involved several monetary techniques generally designed to hide the inflationary aspects of the schemes, the fundamental principle has been the same—use of government credit to push up production. Not only have government expenditures greatly exceeded revenues, but the nation's resources of materials, labor, and plant have been exploited to the utmost.

Although the Nazis have set up devices for controlling and regulating every phase of the national economy, inflation has taken hold. Indeed, because of the lack of adequate credit facilities, inflation gives the appearance of having already entered its final stages, i. e., issuance of various currencies, with the weaker types gradually supplanting the stronger.

It has been said that the outstanding war munition is gold. If this is the case, Germany is in no position to wage war. In sharp contrast to 1914, when the Reich had over $750,000,000 of gold on the basis of the 1914 dollar (equal to over $1,250,000,000 in 1939 dollars) the Reichbanks official reserve of gold and foreign currencies on August 31, 1939, was only $31,000,000. Germany's hidden reserves, moreover, probably are not large.

The amount of gold and foreign exchange obtained from Austria and Czechoslovakia is estimated at $60,000,000. Germany, however, failed to obtain much in the nature of liquid financial assets in Poland, the $80,000,000 worth of gold held by the Bank of Poland having been successfully evacuated by the former Polish government.

Russia's gold stores are estimated at $760,000,000. Moreover, gold production in Russia is estimated at about $180,000,000 a year. Thus, Russia is in a position to provide some financial support to Germany, although this does not mean that there is any assurance that she will do so.

Operations at Peak

Under the goading of the intense armament program, the German industrial machine was operating at break-neck speed for some time before the war began. By increasing labor's productive capacity, by extending the working day, intensive utilization of plant and by improved organization of productive power, a boom was fostered. During the first half of 1939, labor was fully employed, working hours were much longer than in other countries, and industrial production was at a peak. Strictly under the German theory that labor or production is money, the Reich was doing well.

All available indications point toward a leveling off, if not a reversal, of the upward trend of industrial production. Such a development, coming hard upon the heels of increased needs due to the war, means that Germany will have available for home consumption and for export less than before the war.

Although Germany is likely to be successful in curbing internal consumption, an important reduction in consumption is virtually impossible. The German citizen has already tightened his belt to the last notch.

War Stock Rally Follows Profit-Taking Aircrafts and Heavy Industrials Lead Corporate Bonds Higher, Treasuries Yield

New York, Nov. 3.—As a spur to increasing commitments on the long side of markets, repeal of the arms embargo motive operated effectively in the last half of today's security and commodity dealings. Both closed in a rush of buying after morning transactions had established an irregularly downward pattern.

Aircraft issues and some heavy industrials expected to benefit most from sales to belligerents dominated share sections with the aeronauticals at all-time highs and accounting for about one-quarter of total business on the big board, 1,815,860 shares, largest since October 17. Last prices were around the day's top.

Steels, metals, motors and some of the rail equipments were still on the way up when the bell rang at 3 o'clock. Utility, oil and factory groups were all pulled a bit higher in the wake of the war babies.

Foreign Orders

Although aircrafts were strong and active from the start, accounted for by announcement of nearly $160,000,000 more orders from Britain and France; and while brokers waxed optimistic in memos to clients over business prospects now that arms embargo repeal wa assured, there was no immediate response from the general list. Amsterdam stocks were quiet, but Paris and London had strong and active share sessions with American "war" stocks in demand.

Curtiss Wright, which opened on a block of 20,000 shares and ended with a total of 167,800 shares, was the leader and feature of the session, gaining 1⅞ to a new high at 11⅞. The 15 most popular stocks included six airplane shares and several others which have important aviation interests. Aviation Corporation was up more than a point at 8½; Glenn Martin and Curtiss-Wright A were gainers of 1⅛ each and United Aircraft went ahead 2⅛. Douglas, beneficiary in contracts for bombing planes, closed near its high for the year, 1⅜ up on the day.

Steel Shares Active

Steels moved ahead 1 to 3 points net and in some cases were much more than that above the day's lows at the finish. Steel common and Bethlehem gained 2¼ and 2⅜ points, respectively. Republic added ⅞. Buffalo, Youngstown and some other centers of the industry reported new gains in operations to the highest levels since the last World War days.

The further stepping up of automobile assemblies brought buying into the group. Chrysler rose 1⅜, although a virtual shutdown of its plants continued. General Motors was up ⅜, and Continental—which looked rosy to some traders because of its airplane motor section—closed at 3⅜, up ⅝.

Cuban American Sugar jumped 6 points. New York Air Brake rose 2½ on reports it has received orders for 20,000 sets of brakes. Advances ran to 2 points or above in United States Gypsum and Jones & Laughlin preferred, and around a point in American Can, American Smelting, International Harvester, Union Carbide, Western Electric and Anaconda. Dun & Bradstreet reported retail trade for the last week 9 to 16 per cent ahead of a year ago, which helped mercantile stocks. Sears Roebuck made a new high for the year.

Industrial Bonds in Demand

Listed bond trading disclosed a downward trend today in United States Treasury securities, while almost all other sections were firm. The general market started indifferently, but picked up strength in the afternoon, when stock buying also started. Sizable gains appeared in many of the rail and local traction obligations. Foreign dollar securities were neglected and mostly a little lower. Turnover was $8,020,000.

The declining trend of Treasury issues again was attributed by dealers entirely to the indication that $500,000,000 will be raised in new money next month, and all the $1,378,000,000 notes due next March will be refunded, if conditions permit. Precautionary liquidation of portfolios continued and recessions ranged from one-thirty-second to three-eighths point.

Small fractional advances were the rule among best grade corporate issues, which steadily are closing the gap to the highs of last summer. Most speculative rails had a good tone, and some issues advanced more than a point. Holding company issues and convertibles were good.

Latin-American default bonds were marked slightly lower, as holders realized that the Administration plan to lend such countries money might run into serious Congressional opposition. Argentine bonds were slightly better. German obligations advanced fractionally, but other belligerent bonds drifted lower. European neutral bonds were off because of the threatening attitude of Russia toward Finland.

Markets to Close On Three Holidays During This Month

New York, Nov. 3 (AP).—Financial and commodity markets here, and in many cities throughout the country, prepared today to celebrate three holidays before the end of the month.

The New York Stock Exchange, Curb Exchange, Cotton Exchange, and the various New York commodity markets, along with banks, will be closed election day, November 7, Armistice Day on Saturday, November 11, and President Roosevelt's officially proclaimed Thanksgiving Thursday, November 23. Securities markets in other cities, with a few exceptions, will close election day along with the New York markets.

The Chicago Board of Trade, the Nation's big grain trading market, will remain open for business election day as usual. Foreign markets will also be open election day.

The most complete world shutdown of financial and commodity markets since last Christmas looms for Armistice Day, in that it falls on a Saturday when many foreign markets traditionally are closed, and the fact that November 11 is a religious holiday in some countries. All United States securities and commodity markets, with the exception of the Chicago Livestock Market and scattered small regional livestock marts, will be shut. The only foreign markets now expected to be open are the London Money Market, the Liverpool Produce and Provisions Exchange, and the Amsterdam Bourse.

Buffalo Steel Mills Are Now Operating At Record Rate

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 3 (AP).—World War steel production records fell by the wayside today as the Buffalo area operating rate rose to a new peak of 95½ per cent of capacity.

A newspaper survey indicates that the total output of 10,000 tons a day, enough to build a 50-mile railroad, is 25 per cent above wartime days and approximately 20 per cent above the boom days of 1929.

Nearly 15,000 men are employed in the three principal factories—Bethlehem, Republic and Wickwire Spencer. Forty-one of the 43 open hearth furnaces in the area are operating.

While the operating rate has risen 35 points since the present European war started September 1, a gain unprecedentedly swift, most of the unfilled orders are from domestic consumers. Foreign business, the survey says, "is of negligible proportions."

Week's Financing 67% for New Capital

New York, Nov. 3 (AP).—Public offerings of new securities increased during the week ended yesterday to $11,806,500 from $8,541,297 the previous week, Poor's Publishing Co., reported today.

The proportion of new capital financing continued high, 67 per cent of the total representing a demand for new money rather than refunding of existing debt. The volume, however, still failed to approach the level of activity prevailing in the weeks preceding the war.

Pacific Gas Spending $76,000,000 in 3 Years

New York, Nov. 3 (AP).—Pacific Gas & Electric Co. is spending $25,000,000 in construction work this year and will spend another $25,000,000 in 1940, James B. Black, president, announced today. Three new steam plants, each with a capacity of 67,000 horsepower and costing $5,000,000 each, are now under construction on the shore of San Francisco Bay, two to be ready for operation in the summer and fall of 1940, and the third about the middle of 1941.

Texas Short of Oil Despite Vast Reserve

Houston, Tex., Nov. 3 (AP).—Texas, with more than 80,000 producing wells and an underground reserve of 8,500,000,000 barrels, has a shortage of oil, Chairman Lon A. Smith and Jerry Sadler of the Texas Railroad Commission, which regulates production, have asked the United States Bureau of Mines to increase its November estimate of demand (on which Texas allowables are based. Smith said the increase was needed to meet orders from England and France.

Reasons for the shortage include the demand from abroad for oil for war machines; the approach of winter, with a resultant increase in the consumption of fuel oils, and the Texas shutdown in August, which depleted some stocks and cut sharply into others.

Cotton Rally Adds 55 Cents To 80 Per Bale

Neutrality Action and Frost Damage in Texas Spur Price Advance

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 3.—Cotton futures moved forward under full steam late today, rounding out modest early gains with advances of 11 to 16 points.

Assurance that American neutrality laws would be amended, brokers said, seemed the basic reason for the advance. Report of severe frost damage to the Texas cotton crop, however, was another spur to buying.

The market at the opening stepped along in tune with sharp gains at Liverpool. The bullish cast to the trade was emphasized by substantial foreign buying and trade support.

Near midday increased Southern selling, attracted by the swift upturn, trimmed prices for a bit. When late reports of the frost damage, together with action of security markets and increased activity in Worth street reached the market, a new wave of buying lifted futures.

Some hedge selling against raw cotton stocks came from Southern mill interests, but the contracts were well taken.

Cottonseed Oil

Cottonseed oil futures turned around quickly today after morning declines. With trade interests active buyers, final prices were 8 to 9 points higher and close to the best for the day.

Crude oil dipped ⅛ cent a pound with sales reported in the southeast and valley at 5⅜ cents. That price was bid at the close and 5½ in Texas.

Lake Ore Shipments Double Last Year

Cleveland, Nov. 3 (AP).—To feed steel's hungry blast furnaces, Lake Superior iron ore in October was shipped down to lower great lakes ports at the greatest rate since August, 1937, the Lake Superior Iron Ore Association reported today.

October's 9,201,249 tons—largest for any October except 1926's 9,337,774—brought the season's total to 39,593,570 tons, more than double last year's comparable period.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

One way to rueing a pleasant duplicate game is to lose to a singleton king. Yet we players keep right on doing it; there is something so tempting about a finesse. E. B. V., a contributor, did some clear-cut thinking before trying a trump finesse on today's hand. As a result he passed up the finesse, caught the king singleton quite unintentionally, and thereby found the key to 13 tricks.

He says:

"This hand brings up the ever-present problem of dear old singleton honors. The bidding was certainly not all that it should be, but I am one to take the bull by the horns, especially when I am not on the plus side of the score.

"When West opened the club jack I couldn't afford to finesse the spade, so I dropped the singleton king. I had decided to plan that West must have the two missing kings with her strong bid, and if the king didn't drop I would finesse for the heart king and then discard my diamond on the heart ace.

"However, when the spade king dropped (with mutterings by West about lucky people) I led a heart to the ace and led the heart queen, on which I threw my diamond when East failed to cover, thus making seven.

"What would I have done if a heart had been led originally by West? I am afraid I would have finessed the jack and then been set. Of course, the diamond ace should never be led."

Chapter 43

Canby had even used Mrs. Washburn as one of the mediums for standing with Susan—two against one. For it had been impossible to quench the old egotist when reminiscences were being told. She had made an indomitable third, relentlessly capping their every escapade, adventure, or emotional crisis with one of her own. And Canby had turned that to his advantage! Like everything else! Before long Timothy was aware that an unspoken hilarious communion of fun over Mrs. Washburn united the young people—two against one.

AS THEY WERE openly two against his one on the evening when, breaking his paralyzed passivity, he himself brought a book to read aloud. Reading aloud was something Timothy did superlatively well and he had exulted in the idea of showing up Canby's illiterate awkwardness. He had read well, never better, with such feeling and spirit (it was Maupassant's "On Life") that Canby had fairly gaped at him, and at the end, said in humble admiration through the door, "Say, he certainly can knock the spots off yours truly, can't he? You're a whiz, Uncle Tim!" And Susan's voice, "Yes, isn't he wonderful!" They were together again. Admiration made them two against one as surely as derision.

Mr. Dewey now stood up and picked his way along the rock to the other fire. "Moon's due to rise in three four minutes," he said. Wrenching himself away from his hypnotized glare back on the past, Timothy remembered where he was, got to his feet and stepped with the old man from one to another of the sleeping boys, giving each shoulder a shake, saying clearly in their ears, "The moon will soon be up. If you want to see the moon rise, now's the time." They grunted, nodded, and sat up, or propped themselves unsteadily on one elbow and looked around sleepily. All but Eli Kemp. He said clearly, although his eyes continued tightly closed, "What of it!" and pulled his blanket over his head to shut out the light. But Eli had been conditioned by his poverty never to think of anything but how to make another penny and keep from spending it, thought Prof. Hulme, going back to his fire.

By the time he had sat down again beside it, he had forgotten Eli and the other adolescents, his eyes fixed in anguish on the slow thinning of the black velvet back of The Wall. Just so—how many times had he thought it—love had brought light to his darkness. Just so, instant by instant, his loneliness and apathy had been suffused with tenderness and hope. He began to tremble with the violence of sorrow repressed, clenching his hands hard in his pockets as he had clenched them before when shaken by the first gusts of passion.

"Fine, isn't it?" said Mr. Dewey dreamily, watching with heart unwrung.

After a pause, "Yes, it's very fine," said Timothy, correctly.

The dark globe spun fast and smoothly under the feet of the watchers. The eastern mountains sank. The great disk, white with its heatless fire, swam up to its triumph. The twilight dimness of the pasture below the rock turned to silver. The sheep, as if the light had been a sound, stood up, drifted aimlessly about, talking to each other in sleepy, secret voices. Every weathern-worn knob and ridge of the Cobble's granite wave emerged from darkness to visible strength, and was transfigured from strength to beauty.

Mr. Dewey mused, "Doesn't seem possible — up here—now—tomorrow's newspapers will tell about the same old hellish goings-on of humans, does it?"

Timothy knew what he meant. He had been for months increasingly horrified by the statements of Nazi ideals in the news, and the evening before as they talked around the fire, he had asked the boys, "Don't it kind of make you wonder what Gen. George Washington would ha' said? The history books tell us he swore his head off at the battle of Monmouth. What cuss-words could he ha' found for Hitler?"

Timothy thought drearily, "Oh, he's trying to start that up again!" Wanting only one thing, to have the old man leave him alone in his pain, he made no rejoinder.

Mr. Dewey waited a moment, and then went back to his own fire, his dog stepping gravely at his heels.

Timothy sat rigid, horribly impervious to the night's apotheosis of peace. His mind tiptoed up timidly to remind him to look at the beauty around him, and shrank back, appalled by his suffering.

BUT PRESENTLY his professional conscience, reaching him on a reflex of habit, bade him make sure that all was well with those entrusted to his protection. He turned his head to look and saw that, as he had thought, the boys had collapsed again into stone-sound sleep. No, one of them was stirring. Bending his eyes more intently, Timothy saw that the blanketed form nearest him was stirring. He rose to his feet, he took the two or three steps that brought him to the boy, stopped, put his hand on his shoulder.

It was Jules. Wide awake, he lay looking out over the silvered upland pasture and across the valley brimming with white.

Timothy asked, "Something the matter, Jules?"

The boy clutched at Timothy's arm and sat up. "Oh, Prof. Hulme, I can't stand it!" He pulled the teacher down to sit beside him. "It's like that swell place in the Kreutzer — w-where the octaves . . ." He chocked and rubbed his sleeve back and forth over his nose. Timothy pulled out his handkerchief and passed it to the boy, who blew his nose, handed back the handkerchief and pointing to a scraggly small bush near him said, his voice cracking grotesquely from treble to bass and back again, "Prof.. Hulme, maybe I'm crazy, but when that bush—when the light came—when that bush came out of the darkness it c-came singing! Honest! Do you think I'm crazy? Oh, gosh, I wish my darn voice would get through changing."

"You probably weren't quite waked up, Jules," suggested the teacher calmingly. "Sounds to me as though you were dreaming. Rather a nice dream."

The boy was silent, leaning against Timothy's shoulder, turning his head back and forth to look from the luminous bulk of the mountain above them to the valley where a river of white mist marked the course of the Necronsett. Timothy did not look at it with him. He had instantly forgotten where he was. He was far away, back in the past, hearing with a fresh shock the conscienceless levity with which Susan—child of duty though she had always been—airily excused herself to Miss Peck for being late for her work, as she was on almost every one of the many afternoons when Canby took her out in his car. He was sickening at her cool, frivolous answer to a question about the younger sister who had been the core of her heart. "Why, to tell the truth, I haven't written Delia for ages. I don't know just when her commencement is. Oh, yes, she is going to be able to graduate this year. I think so, anyhow." His bruised heart ached and throbbed again in the unbearable pain with which he had watched her bored, blank, absent face in the teachers' meeting where he was putting all his ingenuity into expounding the idea about reading which she and he had worked out together with—for him—such exquisite pleasure. What was this stirring and nestling against him? Oh, yes, Jules, the little Jew boy from the city. He was whispering dreamily, "D'you suppose that mist hangs over the river like that every night, when we're asleep?" And dropping his voice to an even lower murmur, "D'you hear those sheep, Mr. Hulme? They don't sound like that in the daytime. They sound as though they'd put their mutes on to go with the moonshine, they're—Oh, why did Papa have to die!"

The insensitive sleepers had the best of it, thought Timothy, those with open eyes found only sorrow in their waking, the old man to see his ideals down under the hob-nailed boots of Storm Troopers, the boy in the memory to his irreparable loss, he himself—"Well, Jules, I think you'd better lie down again," he said. "Perhaps you can get to sleep now. Here, I'll leave my handkerchief with you, in case you get the sniffles again."

He tucked the blanket around the thin shoulders and stood for a moment watching with envy how the enormous peacefulness of the night flowed over the child, emptied now of his wonder and his sorrow, looking with envy at the other sleepers, not one of whom had wakened.

THE FIRE BURNED low. He crossed two sticks over the coals and sat down, his eyes on the delicate column of smoke, bowing slightly in the faint breath of the night-breeze which so faithfully followed the setting sun, all around the world.

The impalpable lightness of the smoke reminded him—with one bound, memory had caught him by the throat and another of those intolerable scenes played itself out to the end, the first day when the doctor had allowed Susan to be up. Nobody had told him this was to happen. Nobody had realized his right to know before anyone else. When he and Aunt Lavinia had gone to supper, his heart had turned over to see her there in the living-room, wrapped in blankets, pale, her temples thinned to exquisite delicacy, lying back in Miss Peck's great rocker. He was there again, with the others, always all those others, standing around her chair. Near her, Canby fidgeted, half beside himself in the excitement of her actual presence. Timothy saw him again, as though he stood here by the night-fire on the rock, lean over her, heard him say impudently, "You've got the funniest-looking hair, Susan Barney, ever I saw. Looks like a fog. What does it feel like?" and as he spoke, snatching off the blue fillet and burying his hands in the golden-brown mist.

"Give me back my ribbon!" Every time poor Timothy re-heard that angry, peremptory cry he heard more plainly in it the rich hot throb of a note he had not dreamed was in the range of Susan's voice. And then the tussle—as Canby stooped with the ribbon, her hand darted to his hair for a vicious tug that brought the water to his eyes.

"Let go! Ouch!"

She pulled again violently.

Canby struck at her hand, crying out, "Leggo, will you?"

He had torn himself loose, astonished by the pain, his face reddened in fury. "That hurt" he told her indignantly, his voice as passionately out of control as hers.

"Who began it?" she asked in a rage, plunging her eyes into his.

On the other side of the little June watch-fire they faced each other again in intimate anger—the spark between them kindling visibly to flame. Oh, God! the fool he had been to think those gray eyes mild!

"Disgraceful modern manners!" Timothy's mind had instantly tried to range him with the other sedate, mature on-lookers, averting their eyes from this break in decorum as they turned their minds away from its meaning. "What a disgusting roughneck Canby is! He ought not to be associated with our decent country young people! It's a crime, his bringing up here his vulgar ideas of . . ." But Timothy's mind had long ago given up trying to drown out with its feeble chirpings the roll of thunder in his ears. Sitting there in the bright enchanted night he was lost in primitive rage that Canby's brutal young hands knew what his had so longed for as a delicate crowning joy, and he heaped up high around him—since it was his only defense—the self-righteous wrath of the man defeated by his own scruples.

He made an effort, finally, since he was suffocating in his own indignation, to break away from it long enough to breathe, and said anxiously to himself, "This won't do, I can't go on like this. I must think what I am to do."

BUT HE COULD not think what to do. He could not think at all. Another memory had flashed up before his eyes—the worst! But they were all the worst! Like a man caught in the first spasm of a recurrent wave of physical agony, he could only cower and hope to live through it, as his memory, spinning at lightning speed along worn grooves, set before him the familiar beginning so harmless-seeming, so horribly charged with menace—the tea table before the fire that April Sunday evening. Aunt Lavinia's gnarled hands lifting a cup, the students sitting cross-legged on the floor, Jules putting his 'cello away in its case—the astonished stir of exclamation over Susan's appearance, her first outside the sick room—leaning on Canby's arm, brought by Canby—"the doctor was just in and said we might—" "we might—" we—we—the teakettle's gleaming copper belly, the little blue flame under it—the talk, the chatter, his counting one, two, three, four, five teaspoons of tea for the pot, and thinking, enraged, "Why didn't they tell me there was a chance she could come out? Why was I not the one to bring her?"—the pitched inner battle of his determination not to see the strange new different beauty in Susan's face, pale, worn, and rather plain in the after-effects of a long illness, and ravishingly lovely with a dazzled and dazzling light. The setting of his jaw, his silent oath that, come what might, he would take her home. "If I strangle Canby with my own hands, I shall put her in my own car and have her to myself—before it is too late. Why, I have not even told her yet—how can she be sure until I tell her—now, this day, this hour shall not go by until I have told her!" Gazing hypnotized at the first spurts of steam from the kettle, almost at the boil, he heard again the clatter of the young voices, the students drawing out Canby's tiresome wisecracks, the question, "Well, for goodness sake, Can, how many brothers and sisters have you got anyhow? You're always bringing out a new one!" Canby's voice, starting his usual quick-time patter description of his absurd family, his manner anticipating the laugh which always followed, "Why, believe-it-or-not, I was my parents' only child. Fact. My father died when I was a baby, and my mother married a widower with three girls—I was only two then—and she died when I was three, and my stepfather married a divorcee with a boy and girl—and that made six children, halves and steps to each other, and our step-parents got divorced and my stepmother, my first stepmother I mean, married a man with one son, and my stepfather married a woman with an adopted daughter, and that made eight, and then the first step-parents and the second ones had children—and about that time I got sent to the Academy."

President Won't Name War Zones, Pittman Asserts

Senator Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, and one of the authors of the new neutrality law, said yesterday that he did not expect President Roosevelt to issue any proclamation naming combat areas from which American ships would be barred.

This would mean that American vessels bearing wheat, cotton, steel, copper and other supplies which are not arms, ammunition or implements of war, can ply their trade with countries which are all but in the actual theater of war, such as Belgium, Holland, Denmark, the Scandinavian countries and Eire.

A system of markings and radio passwords for our merchant vessels which have been worked out by the Navy and the United States Maritime Commission will serve to avert sinkings, he said.

Seeks $200,000 Road Extension

Prince Frederick, Md., Nov. 3 (AP).—The Calvert County Improvement Committee will meet with Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor at Annapolis Wednesday to urge extension of the Southern Maryland boulevard from Armiger's to here.

The committee, composed of county officials and business men, declared the present high crown, winding road is "one of the worst pieces of state road in Maryland." It estimated that building a concrete highway over the four and a half mile stretch would cost $200,000.

The State Roads Commission said the project was included in an improvement program for State arterial highways, but could give no assurance there would be funds soon for the work.

Wreck on Florida Coast a Mystery
